

The Pittsburgh Gazette.

THE TRAGEDY OF TWO LIVES.

For the Pittsburgh Gazette.
Passing one day through the quietest streets of that quietest of all villages, Economy, I stopped to admire a rose bush which had climbed the rude fence and thrown its treasures of bud and blossom over the rough boards.

While I chatted and looked at the garden, Leonie (such I found was her name) was making up a bouquet.
I like to see her from Economy. I found her in the most interesting of old ladies I ever saw.

Many years before, in the Fatherland, she had been left an orphan with but one lover left—Paul, and one night May morning he departed to seek, for her sake, a home in the "New World."

Almost crazed with grief, Leonie still persisted in her journey "to see his grave."
Of course even this poor consolation was denied her, and in busy New York no one could speak a word of comfort or hope to the broken-hearted girl.

Years and years ago a broken-hearted, half-invalid German had come to my grandfather, begging for work, telling a pitiful story of a lost sweet-heart, of whom he had searched for years only knowing she had left home for America on hearing a rumor of his death.

Gradually the "Baron," as they dubbed him, became a fixture in the household, innocently always getting along in the "Orchard" where the low green mounds told, more eloquently than carved inscription, the glory of the people whose glory is in the past.

AUTUMN FASHIONS.

STREET SUITS.
The new suits for fall wear consist of Scotch plaid, English serge, or their American imitations, water-proof, tweed, plush, and silk, or velvet and silk, and several decided novelties, in plain and ribbed cloth.

Most of them are now made with an upper skirt, which forms a round, full pannier at the back, and wings at the side, and they are completed by either a waist with long coat sleeves, or a basque which forms a sort of small, jaunty coat with lappets, which spreads jauntily over the puffed-out skirt.

On Tuesday night of last week, George Warren, colored, residing at Bridgeport, near Brownsville, was knocked down and robbed.
He was confronted by a "chewy" of tobacco, and while searching his pockets for his "plug," a second man crept up behind and struck him a blow which caused him to fall senseless, in which condition he was dragged to a live stable and $9.50 taken from his person.

Instead of straight round waists, many of them are cut with a slight spring, over which the skirt is fastened, the waist being sufficiently defined by the belt and sash.

The immensely long trains are no longer worn. The longest are not more than a yard and a half long, and a demi-train a yard long is quite sufficient.
A very convenient and stylish method of making rich dresses which are required to serve a double purpose is to make the under skirt walking length, and the upper skirt long, so that it can be looped up to form a very full pannier, or, in some cases, a train for the drawing room.

There is change in the arrangement of ordinary skirts. They are still gored perfectly plain in front, partially gored and laid in flat pleats on the sides, and bunched in large gathers at the back.
These are strictly coat-shaped, small at wrist and rounded up high on the shoulders, the broad muslin collar is often added to the wrist or simulated by a trimming of six or eight inches.

It is the fashion now to ruffle sleeves at the elbow, as well as at the top, and the wrist, but we do not consider it graceful or becoming method for giving a sharp outline to the bend of the arm, and makes the upper part of the arm, which is rarely as full as it ought to be, look thinner still by comparison.

The full dress sleeves worn with very low necked dresses are mere straps with a little quilting of the material or ruffle of lace added; but those ladies who object to long sleeves and still want something more dressy than the long coat or puffed sleeve, adopt the "antique" with ruffles of lace or of material plain or vandyked.

Charming little sailor jackets have made their appearance, and morning dresses in blue cloth, trimmed with narrow folds of black satin and gilt braid.
Some are ornamented with embroidery executed with gilt braid interwoven with black silk, and by some elaborate, are, of course, more expensive.

The sailor jackets proper are short on the back so as to show a full silk sash, have coat sleeves and a square collar, with straight and narrow lapels, but forming deep points upon the shoulders.

Instead of buying real lace collars, which are very expensive, and look miserable after one or two washings, many ladies make much neater ones by taking a strip of beading insertion, and edging it on one or both sides with real threads of Valenciennes lace.
Through the insertion a narrow velvet is run, which looks like a beading, hence the name of beading insertion.

An average of fifty cents each will make very pretty little collars in this way of real lace, which is so much nicer to wear than an imitation in cotton, be it ever so perfect.
