> Arguing with Women. [From the Saturday Beview.]

Ingenious, but untrue, is the statement that men will not argue with women becontribution of new and really valuable matter to any discussion, the general run of men and women in good society are pretty much on a par. The number of men who, in a discussion on any subject, can bring really fresh stores of ready and accurate knowledge to bear, are always very few. Men like Lord Macaulay or Sir W. Hamilton are not more plentiful in society than women like Miss Martineau. Tried by the standard of sound knowledge the talk of an average man is just as ignorant and nonsensical as the in the art of leading and drawing out discussion, women are, on the whole, far superior to men. So that it is not from a feeling of contempt that the cultivated man declines to argue with the cultivated

A more plausible, but still unsatisfactory, theory is that men do not argue with women because women cannot argue, inasmuch as they are very incon-sequencial and illogical. This theory is not worth so much as it is sometimes supposed. No doubt women are illogical. The number of women whose training and reading have been such as to enable them to pursue, for five minutes, a sound pain, swelling, and tenderness. The course of argument, is very small.

But how great is the number of men who have that espacity? Let be moved or even handled. It can be any man moving in a cultivated circle of general society—or even, perhaps, in the peculiar corcles of Oxford or Cambridge—think over the list of his frinds and acthink over the list of his frinds and acquaintsuces, both men and women: Is it possible that his women friends could be more tiresome in argument than he finds his man friends to be? Don't the men plague him with undistributed middles, begging the question, ambiguous terms, and fallacies in every mood of the four figures? Don't they, in arguing on any matter on which they are keenly inany matter on which they are keenly interested, put sentiment and feelieg in place of just inference? The number of men who will make glaring blunders in argument may perhaps be less than that of women who will do so; but their su.

Never Raise a Child by the Hand or

W rist. It is a common practice of nurses and parents to grasp children by a single hand or wrist, and lift them bodily, as in stepping over gutters, streams, &c Occasionally a child is seized by the hands and swung around with great force, the body being held nearly at right angles. This teat is not always followed by immediate ill effects, but it is liable to result in talk of an average woman. And tried most serious injury. At this period of by the standard of imagination—that is of life, the ends of the long bones are united combinations and comparisons—the talk of women is generally better, within certain limits, than that of men. the arm; one between the shoulder and elbow, and two between the elbow and wrist. The arm of the child is, therefore, very weak. When extension is made at the hand, the force is not expended upon long, firm bones, but rather upon bones broken at several points, and very loosely united. A small force, iar less than is required to break a fully formed bone, will separate the cartilaginous portions, or permanently bend them. There is also another form of injury which may occur at the instant. Of this I have seen several examples. It consists in a slight displacement of the cartilages in one of the joints, either the wristor elbow, attended
