In the Baltimore police court, lately, Alice, Lena and Deborah Jones, the latter mother of the two first named, and Catherine Helen were arraigned for assault and attempt to kill Samuel Lee. The victim, who was so badly beaten as to be scarcely recognizable, states that he had been a visitor at Mrs. Jones' house for some time, and on Saturday was requested to call and see them. He did so, and while seated in the parlor in conversation with Mrs. Jones, ed him and threw a handful of snuff into his eyes, completely blinding him. He was then seized and taken behind the door, his legs and arms tied, and cowhided by the women in an unmerciful manner his, screams for assistance being suppressed by having his mouth smother ed in a pillow. He was attacked three times successively, and terribly beaten; a piece of his left arm was bitten out, and bones of his left hand were mashed. The assault was continued for about half an hour, and was assisted in by the two daughters and two men, and when Lee had well-nigh fainted from pain, they
