The message consisted of 8,007 words, and the work began as soon as the manuscript copy furnished the Associated Press was filed in the Washington office. The first wire began work at twenty-four minutes past 1 P. M., and the last wire finished at 2:29 P. The second feat was the transmission by the Western Union Telegraph, the Angio American Cable and the British land lines, of the President's message as a special dispatch to the London Tisses. That journal, with a commendable splitt of enterprise and at very heavy expense, received the message by cable, and gave it to English readers on Peresby moroing, notwithstanding the five hours difference of time against London.
