Far from the capital, in the country swhere the rebels were most powerful, we can well imagine the consternation caused his mother at this intelligence imparted to her by her favorite son. Even at that early age he was eager for this martial life. He dramied only of great deeds and war's alarms; and when his mother gently, braiding his tiny little queue, would gaze into her boy's bright eyes, and read there the language which they spoke, her heart alternated between hope and fear. A gentle little maiden had long been his betrothed. She, too, felt keenly the pangs of parting, which his hopeful, chaing heart had not the time to feel. Bright, bright indeed, was the future for him; and yet one short night cast him from his airy kight even to the depth into which he is sunk. One of those sudden leads of the cast of the sunk. One of those sudden leads of the form the general butchery. Still, his name alone would have been his death-warrant at any-time. So he lived in poverity and constant dread, shunned by Brill and shunning all. When the first extgoots of Chinese were sent to our fatte, he welcoming this opportunity for escape from an atmosphere of death-to him, smuggled himself on board of one of the ships.
