

The latest accounts from Texas represent the Indians as being more hostile and bloodthirsty than ever. Eleven men have been killed on the frontier early in the present month, and four had been carried into worse than Egyptian bondage. The settlers, consequently, were in the greatest alarm. The Camanches were endeavoring to effect a junction with the Northern tribes, and a general war was regarded as imminent. Active preparations, however, were being made to protect the families of the settlers, and to defeat the savages.
