

The Slaughter of the Black-Horse Cavalry.

Mr. Charles Farrand Lansing, a member of the 1st Michigan Regiment, gives the following account of the charge of the Black-Horse Cavalry at Bull Run, which is by far the most graphic, and evidently correct one, yet published:

Commencing with the attack, he says: In the first charge upon the masked battery, in line of battle, the 69th New-York were in front, then the Zouaves, and in the rear the 1st Michigan. Rising to the top of the hill, about thirty rods from the Rebels, we fired, intending to fall back a little and load, as previously ordered. Just then this order was countermanded, and we were ordered to rush on, unloading. This new order was imperfectly understood, and a portion fell back; upon which all did the same, but not more than two or three rods, creating some disorder; but we were in no sense "driven back." After loading, we rushed forward, crossed a road, a deep ditch and a fence, descending the hill, firing as we advanced. By the time we reached the foot of the hill—the Rebels having fallen back—the men of the three regiments were mingled together, every man trying to get in front, as though fighting on his own book. The din of battle was so terrific that no orders could be heard. We were in this position nearly stationary perhaps half an hour.

We then changed, not to retreat, but to take up a new position more to the right, to get at those who were firing at us from that quarter. We were not followed by the enemy on the left. We were in this vicinity constantly engaged between four and five hours, though it did not seem so.

Rickett's Battery of eight guns was stationed on the right of our division, and was taken by the Rebels. A portion of all three of the regiments, without any orders, rushed promiscuously to retake the battery, which was done. Here was some hand-to-hand fighting. The horses were all killed or had run away, and we could not take of the guns, till the Rebels rallied with an increased force, and, after spiking the guns, we fell back to our former position. Facing again to the Rebels, I saw them falling back, trying to draw away a gun into which I had myself driven a spike, but ere they had got it many rods our bullets had made such havoc that they abandoned it.

In a few moments I saw two Rebels advancing to the gun—one with a rifle, and one with a flag, which he was in the act of planting by the gun. The man standing next to me and the Rebel rifleman drew upon each other, and both fell at the same moment, killed, as I believe, by each other. At the same time, I took deliberate aim at the flag-bearer, and he fell as I fired.

By the time I had reloaded, another Rebel was seizing the flag, and he too fell as I fired. Two more fell at this point in a similar manner as fast as I could load. I was some fifteen rods distant, and nearer the gun than most of my comrades, though in other parts of the line others were in advance.

At this moment, the Black Horse Cavalry made its appearance obliquely from the right; all the while the masked battery, as well as infantry, was pouring upon us a fearful fire of shot, shells, canister, &c. As the cavalry appeared, 600 strong, upon the full gallop, carbine in hand, our firing for the moment mostly ceased, each man reserving his charge to receive them with suitable honors.

The horses of the cavalry were all black or gray. Their front showed a line of perhaps ten rods. Our fire was reserved until the left of their front was within five or six rods of our right, when we poured a continuous volley at them, killing most of the horses in front and many on their sides. As they fell, pitching their riders to the ground, those following fell over them and from our bullets, and in five minutes we had sent them probably four thousand pills, and they lay piled upon each other, a mangled, kicking, struggling, dying mass of men and horses—a sight of horror to which no description could do justice! Our aim was mostly at the horses; and I doubt not many more of the men were killed by the horses than by our bullets.

The story that all this fighting was done by the Zouaves is false. The three regiments were mingled together, and all fought equally well. I here speak what I know, for I was directly in front of the cavalry, and nearly in the center. It was the general opinion that not over half a dozen of the cavalry escaped alive, though there may have been more.

During this brief but horrible work the masked battery and large bodies of infantry were pouring their fire into our ranks, and our men were falling on every hand. We again reached their fire, and soon after, Lieut. Murch having been struck down, I and two others assisted him back, and on returning, we found our men still standing their ground.

Soon after this a flag of truce was raised by the Rebels twenty or thirty rods in our front, and our fire slackened. Immediately the white flag fell, and our colors were raised. We knew not what to make of it at the moment, unless they were about to surrender, but supposed afterward the design was to lure us into a more deadly range of their batteries. In a few minutes the rebel flag only was again flying in their place. The contest raged for a time longer, when the firing of the Rebels ceased, and we supposed the victory was ours. The Rebels were seen to fall back, but very soon Johnson's army was seen approaching. We had fought incessantly for four or five hours, without food or drink, almost exhausted at the beginning, our ranks were thinned and broken, we saw no prospect of support, and we retreated in disorder; but there was little running.

The Grand Jury of the United States Circuit Court, in this City, brought in an important paper and presented it to Judge Shipman yesterday, condemnatory of the treasonable course of the following papers:—Journal of Commerce, the Daily and Weekly News, the Day Book, the Freeman's Journal, and the Daily Eagle, of Brooklyn, which express themselves opposed to what they call "the present unholy war," and for the utterance of language which, if expressed in the streets, would be considered a crime against the Government. The Grand Jury are aware that the conduct of these disloyal papers is abhorred by all loyal men, and hope that it is subject to indictment and the punishment of the Court.—N. Y. Examiner.

It is a singular fact that these are all what have been called Democratic journals, and the sentiment of their party, therefore, especially as far as New York is concerned, is very plainly to be seen. Where is the Grand Jury of Baltimore, that it does not look after the Sun, Exchange and the Republican.

David Todd, the old wheel horse of Democracy, in Ohio, said in a recent speech at Cleveland, "I am frank to confess that I heartily endorse and approve every act of Mr. Lincoln since his inauguration. I would support him as soon as I would Andrew Jackson." How different from the bastard Democrats who are secretly and underhandedly trying to prejudice the people against the Administration!
