CHARLES B. KELLER,

BOOTS, SHOES, LEATHER & SHOE FINDINGS.

You must have
BOOTS and SHOES.
You want, First, to get a GOOD article.

You then want them as CHEAP as POSSIBLE.

This is natural and right enough. The question is WHERE to buy?

The subscriber's Store is on Main Street, a few doors above the Stroudsburg House (Marsh's), and is by all odds the most extensive concern this side of Philadelphia.

I have on sale in all their most fashionable varieties, 1st.—LADIES & MISSES' BOOTS, SHOES GAITERS, SLIPPERS, &c. 2nd.—MEN'S & BOY'S BOOTS, SHOES AND BROGANS.

3rd.—LEATHERS, BINDINGS and LININGS. 4th.—FINDINGS in full assortment.

5th.—BOOT TREES, LASTS and SHOE-MAKERS' TOOLS in endless variety.

And these things I am determined to sell at prices to suit customers. Call, examine goods and learn prices before purchasing elsewhere, and you will not regret it. [See 12.] C. B. KELLER.

NEW GOODS

AT

Greatly Reduced Prices!

I WOULD RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE to the public, that I have just made large additions to my already extensive stock and am now selling

DRY GOODS,

GROCERIES,

&c., &c., lower than ever.

My shelves are loaded with MUSLINS,

CALICOS,

DE LANES, and GINGHAMS,

of the most celebrated makes, my charges for which will prove astonishing to customers. My stock of embracing nearly every variety of style, color and fabric is well worth the attention of the Ladies, while in

Dress Goods

CLOTHS and CASSIMERES,

both plain and fancy, I can offer inducements to gentlemen which they cannot forgo without detriment to their finances. My stock of

SHAWLS, YANKEE NOTIONS,

&c., is also full, and is offered low. My assortment of Coffees, Sugars, Molasses, and Syrups, is very complete, and as usual held at a very low figure.

I have lots of goods the names of which could hardly be compressed within the limits of an advertisement, all of which will be sold cheap.

Remember, the place to buy, with the best assurance of getting your money's worth is at

The Sons of Labor.

The injunction, that "man should eat his bread in the sweat of his face," is one of the primary, and definite machinations, which prolong a civil and constitutional prosperity throughout the world. All must, and all are hourly employed, in carrying out the mandate of their own co-operative and interchanging destiny. To be employed at something always, is emphatically the desire of mankind; and few of our race seldom languish for the still and dreary inaptitude of idleness.— God ordains it so, and our own minds anticipate the fixity of the established rule. It is inherent and existant in our nature, to Be, to Do, and to Suffer. We are the Verb, indiscriminately operating in the vast arena of generative action; where all participate in the design of universal improvement, and all accelerate the progress of intellectual achievement. Our own especial joys or sorrows either facilitate or retard our individual success. It is entirely in our keeping either to merit failure or to succeed in the various undertakings of our lives.— But, in this last assertion, men generally, are indisposed to agree. They attribute their failure to some supernatural agency. The thing called Luck, is their favorite axiom—complaints are heard that times are troublous, and friends deceitful—that the world is undergoing a great change, unlike "the same world they loved in their youth." The Commonwealth of Labor is for a while agitated till some are perceived far above their brethren in durable success; but the current moves on in its respective avocations, and the survivors of the alarm have triumphed.

And however exalted in our position or self-esteem, the sentence of labor is executed upon our destinies. The grades of our profession, however trivial, are in themselves the executives of the general law. He who dwindle away his life in the palace, or the ante-chamber, fulfills the decree as inexplicably, as he who has to dig and delve, till death ends his sorrowful existence—till he departs this life like the drone, stung and swollen with contempt and fatigue.

The many whose destiny has placed them in the easy and voluptuous positions of life, seldom recognize the sorrows of their brethren placed in a sterner appointment; and let us inquire which of the two classes enjoy the bitter sweets of their existence. The former, over-wrought in the inapt and languid dispositions which are in accordance with their state, never find relief in their desire. How many persons rise every morning sullen and perplexed, after a night of fever; their slumbers troubled, their bodies ridden by nightmare, and their blood soured by indigestion? Their minds and appetites, too, in a state of nervous excitement. What suit will they wear to-day? What appeal best answers their demeanor? Which particular dress? Who are they to visit? What for breakfast? In short, their whole appeal is, how will they pass over the day. But the latter are otherwise. Their sleep is tranquil, serene and healthy. Their dreams, if any, are the soft realities of their temperate desires. Cheerful and invigorating, both in mind and body, they rise from their hard couch with an alacrity truly refreshing. Their morning meal is sweet, although devoured in haste, their hands willing and their tempers delighted. Resolution and stern determination of will are the accompaniments of the temperate workman. It is these which steel his heart, against sorrow and disappointment—these which nerve his sinewy arm, and inflame his zeal—these which uphold and sustain him in opposition, malevolence, and other encroachments on his unlimited right. He is free—free from enemies, from vices, and from prospective failures. His inheritance is sure, and his reward great. Who has not been delighted with the songs of Burns, composed while engaged in the meannest farm drudgery, or who has not felt his soul glow with admiration as he perused the dignified and affecting pastorals of Bloomfield? Allen Ramsey, too, is one of the examples wherein labor is lightened by song. Lincoln, it seems, was at one time a farm laborer. Johnson also soiled his hands, and many others whose names shall illustrate the pages of history till the end of time. The mental qualifications of a man are seldom obliterated by constant and persevering industry; but these rather brighten the intellect. The diversity of mental and bodily labor serves to strengthen each alternately; and the products of each magnify as they are diversified by studious exertion. How much of human misery is spared to men, if they acquire the habits of industry? The answers are vivid, clear, and exalted. A due exertion, in the ways of industry, surely bring reward, happiness and prosperity. The home of the idler is a den of licentiousness, destitution, and want. The children, squalid and bony, are fostered in the same unprofitable career of their sire. The sin of idleness is inherited with the sin of the general corruption by Adam, or the curse of Law. The energies of youth are made dormant and ineffectual; and at last they become a burden to society, a shame to their parents, and a torment to themselves.

The habits of industry can be acquired at an early age. Youth is the season of exercise, vigor and hope. Once acquired, the industrial habit will lead youth to fame, riches, and elevated position. Bequeath your sons a few fixed and established rules to become industrious, and you may bequeath his right of heirship to anybody.

LANGFORD.

The Harvest of 1867.

The grain and other staples of the country being now fairly harvested and the yield known, the following statement, compiled by an accurate observer, may be of interest, as showing the relative capacity of the different States for producing the various staples.

Illinois, according to this report, is much the largest producer of Indian corn, more than one sixth of the whole crop of the country being grown there, and also the largest producer of oats, yielding more than 20 per cent. of the whole, and of hay more than 20 per cent. Pennsylvania takes the lead in the production of rye, giving nearly one-third of the product of the whole country, and in buckwheat over 42 per cent. New Jersey produces more rye than any other State, according to population.

New York takes the lead in the production of barley, about 40 per cent. of the whole product being raised here.—Virginia takes the lead in tobacco; her crop is about 30 per cent. of the whole. New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey together produce two-thirds of all the rye. New York stands the tenth State in the production of Indian corn, being exceeded by Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Iowa, Tennessee, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Kentucky and Missouri. In wheat New York is exceeded by Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan and Iowa. Illinois alone has in corn about 5,000,000 acres; in wheat, 2,196,000 acres; in rye, 345,000 acres; in oats, 883,000 acres; in barley, 41,000 acres.

The Southern staples, cotton, rice and sugar, cannot, of course, enter into this estimate, but the statistics of these crops for this year are, considering all things, exceeding favorable. Altogether the harvest of 1867 is one of the most bountiful ever gathered in this country.

Temptations of the Race Course

A New York correspondent of a Mobile paper thus speaks of the temptations of the course: "One of the habitues of a certain Broadway sporting house was worth nearly half a million dollars ten years ago. He was engaged in a business that paid him thirty thousand a year, and had the entire of the best society—His wife was the daughter of one of our wealthiest bankers, and all his family relations were of the first respectability. Accompanying a friend to the race course one day, he was seized with a passion for owning fast horses and dashed into the sports of the turf. In a short time he had a stable stocked with the best horses to be had, and his bets were the wonder and envy of those less fortunate in pocket. Luck was against him. He lost heavily; his business went down; one after another of his horses died on his hands; his stable was sold; his house next; his old friends dropped off; his wife died and his children became scattered; and now he spends his nights in loitering about bar-rooms and listening to the horse-talk of jockeys and gamblers. This man would have probably been worth a million of dollars to-day if he had kept clear of the race course."

Judge Williams.

The Germantown Telegraph, an independent journal of wide influence and established character, in an article of marked ability, has come out for Judge Williams, and strongly against Sharswood.—We quote the concluding paragraph: "In the times now upon us it is essential that every man should define his position. Internal peace and unity can only be perfected by the success of the national cause and the defeat of all opponents. It is high time that we set the seal of condemnation upon those who, like the recreant in the White House, can see nothing but unconstitutionality in the acts of Congress or in whatever tends to consolidate and render permanent the triumph of the national cause over the worst treason known to history."

In Maryland the Republican Union party are organizing for a vigorous effort to defeat the new Constitution framed by the late Conservative Convention, which essentially turns the State over, bound hand and foot, to the rebel element. The Republicans will have a hard battle to fight, with the chances against them. In a State where the rebel soldiers are voted and freely accorded the right to enter and control the State, and the colored man who bravely fought and bled for the flag, is down trodden, there can be little hope that Union principles will prevail yet awhile.

The Boston Post, one of the ablest and best conducted Democratic journals in the country, has become a convert to universal suffrage. It remarks: "We should be glad to see the Massachusetts Suffrage law adopted by every State in the Union. No matter what a man's color or size may be—if he can read and write, is twenty-one years old (we have no objection to eighteen), and so forth—let him vote."

A Curiosity.

Mr. Frederick L. Heater, of Wantage township, in this county, is the owner of a pig, which has six legs. The two extra legs, which are well formed, put out of from the knees of the fore-legs, and are used by the animal in walking. The pig is four months old and is as thriving as any of the same litter.—Sas. Reg.

An Adventure in the Cars.

There were five of us—yes, five as happy fellows as were let loose from college. It was "vacation," and we concluded to take a trip to the Falls. We got on board the cars at N., and were soon traveling very rapidly toward our destination.

We had just seated ourselves and prepared for a comfortable smoke, when in came the conductor, and who should it be but our friend Fred B. After the common salutation, "How are you old fellow?" &c., had passed, Fred said he had some business for us to attend to. "Out with it, old chum!" said we; "anything at all will be acceptable, so let us have it!"

"Well, boys," said Fred, in a confidential tone, "in the next car there is a lovin' pair as it was ever my lot to see. They are going down to H. to get married, and now, if you can have any fun over it, just pitch in. They must be cared for, and I don't know who can do it better than you."

In a moment Fred was gone, and we set our heads together to form a plan for "taking care of the lovers."

"I have it, boys!" said Bill Steevers; "we must make the girl think that her lover is married!"

"That's it, that's it!" said we, not giving him time to finish the sentence.

"That he is a married man and the father of children!" said Bill.

"That's the game, boys; now let us play it!"

It devolved upon me to commence operations. According, I entered the car in which we were informed the lovers were. The girl, thinking, I suppose, that she must give her lover all the seat, sat on his knee; and he, for the purpose of protecting her, of course, had thrown his arms around her waist; and so they sat, in real soft lover's style.

All this I gathered at a glance. Stepping up to them, I said:

"Why, Jones, what in the deuce are you doing with this girl?"

The girl arose hastily and seated herself on the seat.

"See here, stranger!" said the fellow, "you're a bit mistaken; my name isn't Jones."

"Why, Jones," said I, "you certainly haven't left your wife and children, and tried to palm yourself off for a single man, have you?"

"I tell you my name ain't Jones; it's Harper.—It never was Jones; 'ain't agoin' to be, nuther!"

I merely shook my head and passed to another seat to see the rest of the fun. The girl looked "wild" after I sat down; but Jones alias Harper soon convinced her that I was mistaken.

About the time they had got feeling right well again, in came Elliott Gregg. Walking up to Harper, he accosted him with:

"Why, you here? How did you leave your wife and babies?"

"See here, stranger, you ain't the first man that's called me Jones to-day, an' I reckon I must look awfully like him, but I ain't Jones. I ain't got any wife, nor babies either; but this gal an' me is agoin' to spiece, an' then you can talk about my wife—and I wouldn't wonder but what in the course of time you might talk about the babies too, but you musn't call me Jones!"

The retort brought forth vociferous laughter from the spectators, and it also brought blushes to the face of the girl.

"Ah, Jones," said Gregg, "you will regret this in the future. I pity your wife and this poor girl."

"So, Harper your real name is Jones, is it?—an' you've been foolin' me, have you? Well, we ain't spiced yet, an' I don't think we will be soon," said the girl, and her eyes fairly flashed fire.

"Jane, Jane!" said Harper, "don't you know I'm Bill Harper. There ain't a darn drop of Jones blood in me, an' I'll prove it!"

At this moment Jeff Jackson, Bill Steevers and Jim Byers entered, and, of course, their attention was called to Harper by his loud talking. They stopped upon to him, and said:

"Why, Jones, what is all this fuss about?"

This was more than Harper could stand. He leaped upon a seat:

"No," said he, "my name is not Jones, an' I can lick the fellow that says it is!"

By this time we got to H., and our friend Fred came into the car and Harper kept quiet. The girl that wouldn't be spiced requested Fred to help her on the train that
