CHARLES B. KELLER,
BOOTS, SHOES, LEATHER & SHOE FINDINGS.
You must have BOOTS and SHOES.
You want, First, to get a GOOD article.
You then want them as CHEAP as POSSIBLE.
This is natural and right enough.
The question is WHERE to buy?
The subscriber's Store is on Main Street, a few doors above the Stroudsburg House (Marsh's), and is by all odds the most extensive concern this side of Philadelphia.
I have on sale in all their most fashionable varieties. 1st.—LADIES & MISSES' BOOTS, SHOES GAITERS, SLIPPERS, &c. 2nd.—MEN'S & BOYS' BOOTS, SHOES and BROGANS. 3rd.—LEATHERS, BINDINGS and LININGS. 4th.—FINDINGS in full assortment. 5th.—BOOT TREES, LASTS and SHOE-MAKERS' TOOLS in endless variety.
And these things I am determined to sell at prices to suit customers. Call, examine goods and learn prices before purchasing elsewhere, and you will not regret it.
[See 12.] C. B. KELLER.

NEW GOODS

AT Greatly Reduced Prices!

I WOULD RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE to the public, that I have just made large additions to my already extensive stock and am now selling

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES,
&c., &c., lower than ever.
My shelves are loaded with MUSLINS, CALICOS, DE LANES, and GINGHAMS of the most celebrated makes, my charges for which will prove astonishing to customers. My stock of embracing nearly every variety of style, color and fabric is well worth the attention of the Ladies, while in CLOTHS and CASSIMERES, both plain and fancy, I can offer inducements to gentlemen which they cannot forgo without detriment to their finances. My stock of SHAWLS, YANKEE NOTIONS, &c., is also full and is offered low. My assortment of Coffees, Sugars, Molasses, and Syrups, is very complete, and as usual held at a very low figure.

Dress Goods
I have lots of goods the names of which could hardly be compressed within the limits of an advertisement, all of which will be sold cheap.
Remember, the place to buy, with the best assurance of getting your money's worth is at BRODHEAD'S
Cheap Store in Stroudsburg.

A MIRROR,

IN WHICH MANY PEOPLE MAY SEE THEMSELVES REFLECTED.

"Albert, I wish you would let me have a couple of dollars."
Kate Landman spoke very carefully, for she knew that her husband had not much money to spare; she spoke earnestly, and there was a world of entreaty in her look.

"What do you want money for?" asked Albert, not very pleasantly.

"I want to get some braid for my new dress."
"I thought you had the materials all on hand for that."
"I thought I had; but Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Thompson both have a trimming of braid upon theirs, and its looks very pretty. It is very fashionable, and it certainly adds much to the dress."

"Plague-take those women's fashions. Your endless trimmings and thing-a-magics cost more than the dress is worth. It's nothing but shell out money when once a woman thinks of a new dress."

"Surely, Albert, I don't have many new dresses. I try to be as economical as I can."
"It's a funny kind of economy, at all events. But if you must have it, I suppose you must."

And Albert Landman took out his purse, and counted out the money; but he gave it grudgingly; and when he put the purse back into his pocket, he did it with an emphasis which seemed to say that he would not take it out again for a week.

When Albert reached the outer door, on his way to his work, he found the weather so threatening that he resolved to go back and get his umbrella; and upon re-entering the little parlor he found his wife in tears. She tried to hide the fact but she had been caught in the act, and she was asked what it meant.

"Good gracious!" cried her husband, "I should like to know if you are crying at what I said about your dress?"

"I wasn't crying at what you said, Albert," replied Kate, tremulously; "but you were so reluctant to grant me the little favor. I was thinking how hard I work—how I am tied to the house—how many little things I have to perplex me; and then to think—"

"Oh, pshaw! What do you want to be so foolish for?"
And away started Albert Landman a second time; but not to escape so easily. In the passage he was met by his daughter, Lizzie, a bright eyed, rosy cheeked girl ten years of age.

"Oh, papa, give me twenty-five cents."
"What?"
"Oh, I want twenty-five cents. Do please give it to me."
"What in the world do you want it for?"

"I want to buy a hoop. Ellen Smith has got one, and so has Mary Allen. Mr. Grant has got some pretty ones to sell. Mayn't I have one?"

"Nonsense! I can't afford to be buying hoops for you to trundle about the streets."
"Please papa."
"No, I tell you!"

The bright blue eyes were filled with tears, and as the child's sobbing broke upon his ear Albert Landman hurried from the house with some very impatient words upon his lips.

This was in the morning. At one o'clock, when he came to his dinner, there was a cloud over the household. His wife was serious; and he was silent; and even little Lizzie, usually so gay and blithesome, was sad and silent.

But these things could not last long in that household; for the husband and wife loved each devotedly, and were really at heart, kind and forbearing. When Albert came home to his tea, Kate greeted him with a kiss, and in a moment the sunbeams came back; and had the lesson ended there the husband might have fancied that he had done nothing wrong—that the cloud had been but the exhalation of a domestic ferment for which no one was particularly responsible; though he might not have banished the conviction that women's fashions were a nuisance, as well as a frightful draft upon husband's pockets.

After tea Albert lighted a pipe and walked out. He had gone but a short distance when he met Lizzie. In her right hand she dragged an old hoop, which had been taken from a dilapidated flour barrel, while with her left she was rubbing her red, swollen eyes. She was in deep grief, for she was sobbing painfully. He stopped his child and asked what was the matter.

She answered, as well as her sobs would let her, that the other girls had laughed at her, and made fun of the old hoop.—"They all had nice, pretty hoops, while hers was ugly and homely."

"Never mind," said Albert, patting the little one upon the head—"perhaps we'll have a new hoop some time."

"Mayn't I have one now? Mr. Grant's got one left—oh! such a pretty one!"
The sobbing had ceased as the child caught her father's hand eagerly.

"Not now, Lizzie—not now. I'll think of it."
Sobbing again, the child moved on toward home, dragging the old hoop after her.

Presently Albert Landman met some of his friends.
"Hallo, Albert; what's up?"
"Nothing in particular."

"What d'y'e say to a game of billiards?"

"Good! I'm in for that."
And away Albert went to the billiard room where he had a glorious time with his friends. He liked billiards. It was a healthy, pretty game; and the keeper of the place allowed no nonsense upon the premises.

They had played four games. Albert had won two, and his opponent had also won two.

"That's two and two," cried Tom Piper.
"What d'y'e say to one more?"
"All right—go on," replied Albert, full of animation.

So they played the fifth game, and he who lost was to pay for the five games—it was an exciting contest; both made capital strokes; but in the end Albert was beaten by three points; and, with a light laugh, he went up to settle the bill. Five games—twenty-five cents a game—a dollar and a quarter. Not much that for such sport; and he paid the money with a good grace, never once seeming to feel that he couldn't afford it.

"Have a cigar?" said Tom.
"Yes."
They lighted their cigars, and then sauntered to another room to watch other players.

By-and-by, Albert found himself seated over against a table at which some of his friends were playing; and close by him stood two gentlemen—both strangers to him—one of whom was explaining to the other the mysteries of the game.

"It is a healthy pastime," said he who had been making the explanation, "and certainly it is one which can have no evil tendency."

Albert heard the remarks very plainly, and he had a curiosity to hear what the others, who seemed unacquainted with billiards, would say.

"I cannot, of course, assert that any game which calls for skill and judgment, and which is free from the attendant curse of gaming, is of itself an evil," remarked the second gentleman. "Such things are only evils in so far as they excite and stimulate men beyond the bounds of healthful recreation."

"That result can hardly follow such a game," said the first speaker.
But the other shook his head.

"You are wrong there. The result can follow in two ways. First, it can lead men away from their business; and second, it can lead men to spend money who have not that money to spare. You will understand me. I would not cry down the game of billiards; for if I understood it, I should certainly try you a game now; but whenever I visit a place of this kind, I am led to reflect upon a strange and prominent weakness of human nature as developed in our sex—"

For instance, observe that young man who is just now settling his score. He looks like a clerk; and I should say from his manner, and from the fact he feels it his duty to go home at this hour, he has a wife and children. I see by his face that he is kind hearted and generous, and I should judge that he meant to do about as near right as he can. He has been beaten, and he pays a dollar or so for the recreation of some two hours' duration. If you observe, you will see that he pays it freely, and pockets the loss with a smile. Happy faculty! But how do you suppose it is in that young man's home?—Suppose his wife had come to him this morning and asking him for a few dimes to spend for some trifling thing—some household ornament, or some bit of jewelry for the ornament of her person—and suppose the little child should put in the plea for a dime or two to buy dolls and picture books with, what would have been the result? What do you think he would have answered? Or fifty men just like him, would not five and forty have declared that they had not the money to spare for any such purpose? And, moreover, they would have said so, feeling that they were telling the truth. Am I not right?"

"Upon my soul," responded the man who understood billiards, "you speak to the point. Ah! it is well for such wives and children that they do not know where all the money goes!"

The game was finished; the two gentlemen moved on; and Albert Landman arose from his seat and left the place—Never before had he had just such thoughts as now possessed him. He had never dwelt upon the same grouping of ideas. That very morning his own true, faithful, loving wife had been sad and heart-sick because he had harshly and unkindly met her request for a small sum of money. And his sweet Lizzie had crept away to her home almost broken hearted for the want of a simple toy such as her mates possessed. And yet the sum of his little one's wants amounted to not as much as he had paid away that evening for billiard playing.

Albert Landman wanted to be an honest husband and father, and the lesson was not lost upon him. On his way home he stopped at Mr. Grant's and purchased the best and prettiest hoop to be found, with a driving stick painted red and white and blue; and in the morning when he beheld his child's delight, and had received her grateful, happy kiss, the question came to his mind—which was the best and happiest result—this, or the five games of billiards?

A few mornings after this, as Albert arose from the breakfast table, he detected an uneasy, wistful look upon his wife's face.

"Kate, what is it?"

"Albert, if you could spare me a few dollars this morning."

"Certainly my love. Anything in reason to make you happy." And out came the purse, and the money was handed over with a warm genial smile!

What! Tears at that? Was it possible that she had been so little used to such scenes on his part, that so simple an act of loving kindness thus affected her?

How many games of billiards would be required to give such satisfaction as Albert Landman carried with him on that eventful morning to his shop?

A very simple story, is it not? But how many may gain a lasting profit by giving heed to the lesson!

TAKE WARNING BY HER.

Caution to Wealthy Young Ladies who are Tempted to Steal.

In Pittsburg, a short time since, the daughter of a prominent and well-to-do citizen went into the store of one of the largest dealers in jewelry, and asked to be shown some fine diamond rings.—Knowing the ability of the family to indulge in such extravagances, the young lady's request was very readily complied with. After examining a number of rings the fair one at length selected one that suited, stating, however, that she would not at that time take it with her, but would make a memorandum of the price—above $200—and would call in a day or two with the money. After some further examinations of the assortment of rings the lady took her departure, and with her, the salesman had strong reasons to suspect, went the identical ring she had selected; for, upon examination, immediately after her departure, it was ascertained that the ring was non est inventa. The proprietor of the store at once set down and addressed a polite note to the dishonest one, requesting her to return the stolen property, or its value in money, immediately, or else steps would be taken which must result in an unpleasant exposure. Not many hours elapsed ere the jeweler received a visitor at his residence, in the person of the thief, who, covered with shame and confusion, tearfully acknowledged her fault, stating that in an evil moment she had yielded to temptation, and committed a crime of which she had bitterly repented. It was her first offense, she said, and her humble supplications to the jeweler, touched that gentleman in a tender place beneath his vest, and he forgave her, agreeing not to permit her name to get into the paper, and he kept his word, for it was not through the proprietor of the store that the item was obtained. It is hoped the severe lesson which the young lady received in this instance, may be the means of her salvation, when again the tempter comes.

Omaha, Nebraska, is a city that is in despair. It wants laboring men and cannot get them. The Omaha Republican of August 23, speaking of the labor market in that city, says: "Of clerks, salesmen, lawyers, doctors, we have any quantity, in fact more than we really have any need of; but laborers, stone-cutters, masons and plasterers we are sadly deficient in. Laborers command readily $3; carpenters from $4 to $5; bricklayers and masons from $6 to $7; plasterers, $5 to $6; blacksmiths, $5; printers from $20 to $25 per week; bookbinders from $20 to $25; news compositors, 46 per 1,000 ems; tailors, shoemakers, saddlers, machinists, engineers, teamsters, barbers and men of all trades, command all good wages and steady employment. There is another class of persons who would do well in Omaha—we refer to manufacturers of small wares."

The following important information is from the Banner of Light, the organ of Spiritualists:

"Celestial man takes on six enveloping clothing in his descending cycle, his outward coming life, his incarnation; or, perhaps better worded, he grows outwardly from himself, as spirits into six degrees of expression, his seventh degree being himself, most internal, most difficult in the special or analytic sense (which is the larger diviner) when making his upward cycle of movement; for then he exercises his negatives, his superficial and artificial characteristics, and makes himself more consciously immortal in wholeness—in the seven degrees of his trifold being, conscious of his past consciousness—a harmonic trinity in unity, Lord and Lords."

Appointment.
Mr. James H. Walton, formerly of the United States Mint at Philadelphia, has been appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury General Inspector of Revenue for the State of Pennsylvania. The position is one of much trust and general responsibility.
