COUNTY INSTITUTE.

STROUDSBURG, Dec. 10th, 1867.

In pursuance of a previous notice the Teachers of Monroe County assembled themselves together at the Court House, in Stroudsburg, to hold the third annual County Institute.

On motion, Nathan Lesh gave a drill of thirty members in Algebra. The Institute then adjourned till to-morrow morning, (Wednesday) at 10 o'clock a. m.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

The meeting was opened by reading a portion of Scripture and prayer by James Carr, Esq., J. B. Storm, President, in the Chair.

Next business before the Institute was the admission of new members.

First exercise on the programme was Geography by Mr. Kunkle, who asked many important questions, which elicited much discussion, and the ideas of many were freely exchanged, with, we hope, good results.

Next an address by Prof. Coburn, which was replete with instruction, after which the following question was discussed, viz: What is the best method of increasing teachers' salaries?

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Opened by calling roll, after which Mr. Appenzeller, the handless man, conducted an exercise in penmanship, reducing writing to a science, explaining and beautifully illustrating the principles of writing.

After analyzing a few letters, and with his superior skill, pointing out, explaining and uniting the different principles which enter into the formation of each, he was requested by the unanimous voice of the Institute, to continue his explanation throughout the whole alphabet, which he did to the entire satisfaction of all.

Prof. Coburn, of the school department, then took the floor, and spoke some time upon Institutes and the object of their institution, clearly showing the advantages the teachers of the present day have over those who taught thirty or forty years ago, when there was no co-operation between teachers, but jealousy.

THE EVENING SESSION.

was opened by a lecture by G. S. Boyd on Geographical names, their History and Meaning. The speaker set out by showing that nations observe certain laws in their Geographical names, and to make the study of Geography interesting it was necessary to understand their laws.

not observe that law of naming. How shall we account for it? He accounts for it that the English retained a love for their mother country. English on settling another country adopted the names already found, while the Spanish and French changed the names and used their own.

Prof. Coburn then took the floor and lectured on the qualification of the teacher. This lecture was plain and practical, abounding in good common sense. Among the qualifications he laid great stress on good spelling.

THURSDAY MORNING.

opened by reading a portion of scripture and prayer by Prof. Coffin, of Lafayette College.

Prof. Coffin then gave instruction on square and cube root, which he beautifully explained by means of blocks. His explanations were so plain and practical, that a person with but a limited knowledge of mathematics could readily understand, what are considered the difficulties of those rules.

Next an address by Prof. Coburn, which was replete with instruction, after which the following question was discussed, viz: What is the best method of increasing teachers' salaries?

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

After calling the roll the Institute proceeded by ballot to elect a committee of five on teachers' certificates.

After which Judge De Young addressed the Institute, who said, teachers, you occupy high positions in society. Your duties are of vast importance.

He was followed by Hon. S. G. Boyd, subject, course of studies proper for American boys. What is a proper education will be determined by the duty they will be called upon to discharge in future life.

He was followed by Mr. Deans, who delivered an address upon Orthography. He urged upon teachers the importance of teaching Orthography practically, and ignored the practice of teaching a child the alphabet by having him repeat his A B C's until he had parrot like committed them.

Mr. Watson, County Supt. of Susquehanna followed, upon the subject of teaching Grammar. He thought the old method of teaching grammar all wrong, it was teaching without any point, without principle, and amounted simply to jargon.

ing sentences, he used Clark's system of diagram's. As to the best method of learning rules, he said it was his opinion that the definitions and rules should be perfectly learned.

Mr. Boyd then took up and explained multiplication and division of fractions, clearly explaining why in one case the divisor should be inverted.

THURSDAY EVENING.

J. S. Waheob lectured upon some of the fine arts and their relation to education. The speaker showed, first, the influence of painting and statuary in the cultivation of the taste among the people of Greece and Rome; in the second place, he showed the influence of the modern painters of Italy, upon the cultivation of the tastes of the present age.

C. W. Deans, Esq. followed on the peculiarities of American education. The speaker first referred to the different systems of education among the ancients. Among the Chinese, education was supported, as a means of official promotion.

Horace Mann accounts for the fact upon the ground that when the scholars leave school they have no chance to apply their education. England is behind, she supports sailors, paupers and condemned criminals, but no system of common school education.

He was followed by Hon. S. G. Boyd, subject, course of studies proper for American boys. What is a proper education will be determined by the duty they will be called upon to discharge in future life.

FRIDAY MORNING.

Institute opened by reading a portion, Scripture, and prayer by J. B. Storm,

President in the Chair, after which some questions which the teachers had sent in were distributed and excited much interest in their solution.

Mr. Boyd then took up Allegation and in his able manner explained it, and closed by saying that mathematics required thought, and that if we wished to become successful teachers we must become original thinkers.

Mr. Watson, followed upon Mental Arithmetic, giving some very plain and practical solutions, to meet all cases, whereas, Stoddard's solution, upon what are called the age, questions will only solve those of a particular character.
