It is also sown in the fall, upon praire which has been broken up in the spring or summer. In northern Ohio the season was apparently much later .-Little corn was to be seen in the ground, nearly all had been planted. The forests were not yet in full leaf, and many fruit trees were still in blossom. This was the case until the Allegheny ridge was reached, on the eastern side of which the spring seemed to be more advanced and vegetation of all kinds better developed. In the West, crops of all kinds look ex-* eccdingly well. Beyond Pennsylvan'a magnificent fields of spring and winter wheat are constantly seen, and a mo t bounteous harvest seems to be at hand .-Kansas has never heretofore been able to supply her population of 200,000 per sous with bread from her own soil, but this year she is pretty sure to do it .-More beautiful fields of wheat than are now ripening on the fruithful bottoms of of the Kansas river were never beheld. A very large extent of corn has also been planted, and unless great disasters should intervene, the agricultural products of the West this year will surpass all precedents. Fruit trees look remarkably healty, and are full of promise. In the Mississippi valley, and beyond it, the apple tree is much more healthy and luxuriant than with us, and the fruit is rapidly becoming abundant. Orchards of greater or less extent are being set out on nearly every farm, and a disposition to promote fruit culture is observable everywhere. In Missouri, especially, the graje is receiving great attention, and "vincclad hills" frequently occur along the
