Langhingly, lovingly, safe to the shore. Oh, for the merry hearts, and the childish slee That dwelt in that cot by side of the sea.

And Mand was beautiful-her golden hair Had caught the glint of the sea-nymphs, fair, And the gry sea-shells tint had tipped To crimson her bright cheek and lip, And strangers would gaze by her beauty aw Till she gained the name of fairy Maud, And we scarce noticed the years had flown Till we waked one morn and Maud-was gone A lover's eyes-and a stranger's smile, Had stolen from us our maiden child. Grandpapa moaned—but he bowed his head "Cheer up, little Aggie," he softly said, "This shadow that covers our lives like a pall May be the shake of an angel's wing after all. See that pure white dove cleaving the air Casts a shadow as dark as that sea-hawk over

I could only sob through each fast falling tear, Grandpapa-Grandpapa-the shadow is here.

And from that day my song was low, For Mand was gone-and we missed her so; Grandpapa's hair grew white from that very their presence and assistance. day,

And my life was lonely, till there came to me A voice far above the roar of the sea, My heart still echoes that desolate cry, Grandpa-Cousin Aggie-I've come home

But I only unclasped the babe from its rest, And gathered her into my lonely breast, Never asking for the tears we had shed in vain, Little Mand-Grandpa's Maud-was mine

But despite my tears she kept drifting away, And despite my prayers—until one day She threw up her white arms and in wild terror said

"The waters are deep—Grandpa—I'm afraid!" Then a beautiful smile her wan features lit o'er, Wasn't grandpapa bearing her safe to the shore? And since that sad time, Maud's child with me

Mr. Whackhammer's Dream. To all who have ears to hear, but are not here

I had a curious dream last night Which pictured an unusal sight, And the more strange it seemed to be From its unique locality. Twas in this county of Monroe, Where good things struggle hard to grow; Where the majority still hold, There's nothing sure but rocks and gold; Who call-of taxes on the roll-The school-tax meanest of the whole Who choose directors with the view To check school interest all way through; Choose ignorance their bliss to reap Because there's nothing half so cheap Twis here I dreamed, and you shall know A tragic fate hung o'er Monroe! The balance trembled! had it fell The consequence no tongue can tell-But in this Institute I stood, Where you have worked for public good, When suddenly a distant roar Barst on my ears! threw ope the dorr! And, looking out, with some alarm, I saw men hasting, as from harm, But, bent this way, I waited still With mind and body all athrill! When what! Directors! every one Who to this common centre run, Followed by thousands, great and small, From every township, earnest all, Streaming in columns, strong in might. From valley, ridge and mountain hight, With banners flying, "Wisdom," "Truth,"
"Light," "Knowledge for the mind of Youth Whilst with one voice the people cried,-"Gire us good schools if naught beside; We've greatly erred, we own the wrong, Neglected this high duty long; We can support a yearly school And now resolve to make the rule!" And then the multitude gave cheer With noise still ringing in my ear, While these unfettered teachers rose And tore their hair and rent their clothes ! Some laughed! some cried! some roared ou right!

Bursted! unhooped! at the strange sight,

Whilst Storm fell back, dumbfounded quite

But running over with delight! And then the multitude went on Rejoicing over what had here been done Whilst they, the grand majority, Had done their little grudgingly. The scales had falled from their eyes They'd groveled long but now would rise; Provoked that they so long were fools They'd empty pockets for the schools; They'd leave the night and claim the day And go rejoicing on their way! United with the general voice, The whole vast multitude rejoice When such a shout of joy arose
It shook my bed! broke my repose!—
I woke so mad, had boots been on I'd left no spot to stand upon!

And kicked Monroe clear out of sight And left a hole as black as night! Then, after in a day or two, I'd filled it up to suit my view
