erefore, all of a sudden, a violent hurch-goer. He prayed loudly, strenuasly, as if heaven were to be carried by orce of lungs. Indeed, one might always ill, when he had sinned most during the eek by the clamor of his Sunday devoon. The quiet Christians who had been odestly and quietly traveling Sionward ere struck with self-reproach at seeing temselves so suddenly outstripped in eir career by this newly-made convert. om was as rigid in religion as in money township, by a young man named Chaunatters; he was a stern supervisor and ensurer of his neighbors, and seemed to hink that every sin entered up to their count became a credit on his page. He ren talked of the expediency of reviving ne prosecution of the Quakers and antiaptists. In a word, Tow's zeal became the school house where Miss Dwight was his riches.

Still, in spite of his strenuous attenon to forms, Tom had a lurking dread at the devil after all would have his OF Repairing neatly executed, and char- due. That he might not be taken unawares, therefore, it is said he always carried a small Bible in his pockets. He had also a great folio Bible in his counting-desk, and would frequently be found reading when people called on business; on such occasions he would lay his green spectacles on the book to mark the place, while he turned round to drive some usurious bargain.

Some say that Tom grew a little crackbrained in his older days, and that fancying his end approaching, he had his horse new shod, saddled, and buried with his feet uppermost, because that, at the last day, the world would be turned upside down, in which case he would find his horse ready for mounting, and he was de-MONUMENTS, &c. &c., termined at the worst to give his friend a run for it. This, however, is probably a fluous-at least, so says the authentic old legend, which closes his story in the following manner :

> "One hot afternoon, in the dog days, just as a terrible black thunder gust came up, Tom sat in his counting-house in his white linen cap and India silk morninggown. He was on the point of foreclosing a mortgage, by which he would complete the ruin of an unhappy speculator, for whom he had professed the greatest friendship. The poor land jobber begged him to grant a few months' indulgence. Tom had grown testy and irritated, and refused another day.

"My family will be ruined and brought upon the parish,' said the land jobber. "Charity begins at home," cried Tom 'I must take care of myself these hard times.'

"You have made so much money out of me,' said the speculator.

"Tom lost his patience and his piety. "The devil take me," said he, 'if I have made a farthing.'

and His Whereabouts.

Dr. Kirk, writing from Zanzibar on the 30th of April to Miss Livingstone, daughter of Dr. Livingstone, says :----

"By the last news of the Arabs he (Dr. Livingstone) had gone to a place called Manema, which is on the other side of Tanganylka Lake: but this place you will not find on any map. At Ujiji he made friends with some Arabs who I hear have been very kind to him, and in their company visited Manema, which is about two hundred miles west of the lake, and if they must have crossed in punts or canoes, or what we call dhows. He and his Arab friends got to Manema, and they (the Arabs) made a good business in ivory. I suppose the doctor did what he went for, and will tell us some day what he saw; but on his way back he gotwell, he seems to have been bard up, as should have said when out of cash, and detained for remittances. Luckily the means were at hand, and the man I sent to Ujiji to help him has sent on all he needs, and there will still be a good store on his return to Ujiji. The expense and loss in getting things so far into a savage land are great, and at a cholera time it was well we got anything up at all, so that he will never receive the whole of what sent and Mr .- paid for. A second supply has been forwarded, but I shan't be sorry if the doctor passes it on the way. I should say the parcel of clothing and boots was sent off long ago.

Grooming Horses.

The horse being the most important machine in the farmer's establishment. care should be taken to preserve him in as parteet a state of health and condition as possible. The ordinary cure of a horse consists in feeding and watering him, and when from neglect he suffers, dosing him with balls and drenches. Physicking a horse may be avoided altogether by treating him properly. Give him a roomy, airy stable-a loose box, or stall, is preferable to tring up with the halter .-lean out his stable daily ; pothing is more hurtful to the feet of a horse than to permit him to stand in a pile of fermenting manure.
