AGRICULTURAL.

Alderney Cows for Butter.

Among a very large class of farmers the current expenses of the household are paid from the proceeds of a poultry yard and of a small butter dairy, which are under the management of the farmer's wife. For her benefit, then, would it not be well to urge over and over again the importance of keeping the best breeds of poultry and the best breeds of cattle for their milk and butter producing qualities? We find that very many farmers, in fact they make up the majority in Ohio and Indiana, who own from forty to one hundred acres of land, have cattle that are inferior in size, and neither good for meat or milk. Their farms are too small to warrant them indulging in "short horns," so they are content with scrubs of the vilest kind, and their wives are too often expected to buy the family groceries and clothing with their chickens and eggs, and with butter made from these poor excuses of cows.

To all these the writer would recommend a breed now becoming very popular in the Eastern States, but rarely seen in Ohio, viz., the Alderney. True they are small, but the farmer who can sell but one or two calves or steers each season cannot afford to sacrifice milk to size. He keeps three or four cows chiefly for their milk and butter, not to make money from the sale of stock. The Alderney is the finest breed for butter making in the world, their milk being almost as rich as ordinary cream. They are easily kept, are very docile, and even the males of the breed are not breachy. In order to introduce this breed among Penna., farmers, let half a dozen join and buy a thorough bred Alderney bull, and by judicious crossing with good grade cows, they may soon have the best of milkers, and double the quantity of butter he obtained from the same labor expended on their scrub stock.—Cor. Cincinnati Gazette.

Ancient Farming.

The "good old times" that we occasionally hear regretted, do not seem to have existed in connection with farming. For five centuries back the practice of agriculture has been, instead of retrogading steadily though slowly improving. In the fourteenth century the average product of what per acre, in Great Britain, was only ten bushels, thus approximating the production of our older States at the present time. A farm of five hundred and seventy-two acres, at that time, could keep but twenty six cows, with a very much smaller proportion of other stock than might be expected. Roots were then unknown. It was not until four hundred years since that gardening was commenced, and cabbages were first introduced into England; but the gardening must have been somewhat limited, for in the year 1500 the royal family of England, desiring a salad, were obliged to import one from Holland. Hops were introduced there in 1524, and potatoes in 1563.—Turnips were grown as garden crops from 1610, and fifty years later found their way into field culture. In 1684 it was discovered that they could be safely fed to sheep. (Doubtless some sheep of a discursive and inquiring habit of mind made that discovery for itself.) During the eighteenth century carrots and beets were introduced in agriculture, and in 1811 the mangel was first brought into notice as a useful root. In comparing the advance of agriculture, and the gradual introduction of useful plants, grains, and roots which not only has been, but is now, of almost yearly occurrence, we cannot but suppose that the comfort and happiness of our race, assured as it is by the present high position of this branch of industry, has still more to gain from the inevitable advances yet to be made.

Live Stock.

In the hurry of fall work, we must not neglect our stock. Because beef, butter, cheese and pork are low, many farmers are cruel and foolish enough to neglect and half-starve their calves, steers, cows and pigs. We hazard nothing in saying that those who give their young stock good and the necessary care, are sure of their reward. The present of low prices are only temporary, and now is the time to prepare for the reaction which is sure to follow. Select the best cows and sows for breeding; use only thoroughbred males; feed liberally and take good care of the young stock; when the market changes for the better, you will have something that will bring a good price.

Stock.

How much stock ought I to keep upon my farm? Just all that your farm can support. Keep all the stock that your hay, stalks, straw, roots, and other crops can feed. Sell nothing from your farm except stock. If you dispose of any grain, do it for the purpose of buying more feed for your stock. Be sure that every animal is kept in a thriving condition. Have no starveling on your premises. Feed liberally or your returns will not be the best possible. Have your stock in such condition that a portion of it will at all times be ready for market. By this means, you may always have a liberal supply of rich manure, which will enable you to keep your land improving year by year, and secure the most desirable result from it.

The Best Grass for Butter.

If you aim at a great flow of milk, feed clover; if you wish rich milk, and well-flavored butter, feed young timothy and white clover; if you aim at the best results, both in quantiy and quality of butter, feed on fresh pastures of white clover and timothy in Summer, and early-cut timothy and wheat bran in Winter. The grass must be cut when heading-out; or better, young aftermath well cured. Avoid roots and garden stuff in general, if you wish a good quality of butter—though it is now held that those fed while milking or immediately before, will remedy the evil.
