A CONTRAST.

There are times and seasons when there is no way to settle the real status of a mooted point so well as by contrast. This principle holds good in ordinary life; and the difference between every day matters, and the intricacies of a political squabble are not great, but that the same rule may be applied to both. There is just now a sore source of trouble raging in this 12th District, as to first where the Congressman belongs, and, second who shall be the man, or rather as to which county, or selection of counties, shall have the power of selecting the man. Two weeks ago we gave publicity to a sligh episode in the political Congressional history of the district, wherein it was established beyond a doubt, that Democratic law, re cognized as binding for some thirty years decreed that each county should, in turn, be entitled to the candidate. A precedent, safe and sure, established by "the Democracy of gallent little Monroe," some sixteen years ago, decreed, that in the rest of the counties was vested the right to say who the candidate should be, and that in pursuance of that right. Monroe selected Wm. H. Dimmick as the candidate of Wayne county, in spite B. Beardsley should be the man So far, so good. Wayne, feeling herself bound so to do, quietly acquiesced in the decision, and by her determined show to stand by the action of the Conference, headed off a bolt and a that the nomination belonged to the man, the representative, provided his record was clear, and when Mr. Dimmick's first term expired, she, without even the shadow of a home contest, presented him to the next Conference as her unanimous choice for nomination. Mr. Dimmick had done nothing to merit this reward, but his home constituents felt that to be consistent his nomination for the second term must be conceded. Thus was another precedent established, not by gallent little Monroe, to enable her to scalp a supposed enemy, but by poor attempt of some of the Monroe Democrats to attempt only failed of complete success two years later, because the thing was too bald faced to be entertained by the rest of the counties, who had justice enough left to pre-George-was killed by the first attempt, was his and Pike county's due, but not unof the Democracy of gallent little Monroe, and considerable tugging had satisfied them down. It was not for want of will, but bespite of specious arguments, and most alarmof her conduct towards Wayne.

noon of the Convention, was spent in ballotings, adjournings, button-holings, and the whetting of whistles, but without definite result. The contest at the delegate election had been so bitten, that neither candidate could be induced to give way. Things looked dubious, and it was feared that Monroe would miss representation in the Conference and lose the nominee. At length, however, the spirit of compromise was invoked, and the "muss" settled by dividing the delegation, and Richard S. Staples was appointed to represent Gen. Burnett, John B. Storm to represent Peter Gilbert and Andrew J. Shoemaker to represent John Coolbaugh, at other counties, parties to it, found a most stunning elephant on their hands. They grew quite facetious in his paper, of yesterday, in want of good Organs, are invited to call collars. cheerfully conceded the candidate to Monroe, but asked Monroe that she settle upon her own choice. Instead of this Monroe pressed her home triangular fight, and demanded that Conference step in and settle matters for her. This was asking more than the contract demanded, and the prospects for Monroe's success became gloomy indeed. Other patriots had gathered at Easton, who were willing to submit to sacrifice in their own persons, but were not willing to say which MORNING, 101, - - EVENING, 71 of the three men should be the choice of MORNING SERMON: Episcopal service and Monroe. After some one hundred and forty odd ballots, which extended unto the next day at noon, Monroe gallantly carried off the palm, in the nomination of the Hon. John B. Storm, whose nomination was at once made unanimous.

It was apparent at the first ballot that neither Coolbaugh, Gilbert nor Burnet, could, in any event, be settled upon, and before the end it was only a question, as to which of the counties should have the man in case Monroe was deprived of it. Dimone time came within one of carrying off the immediate process for the collection thereof, prize, and a recurrence of the opportunity would have been seized upon to the total discomfiture of gallant little Monroe. A like opportunity was afforded Monroe in the person of J. B. Storm, and it was thought by a large majority of the Conferees, that it was no disappointment to him that he recognized the hint, and, by voting for himself, settled the matter just as it should be settled, by securing it to Monroe her clear right. She had failed to make her selection, and in the result Conference had done the best she could for her. Of course there was bolting and a contest but Mr. Storm was elected nevertheless.

And right here looms up the contrast between Wayne county deprived of her rights, in the defeat of Mr. Beardslee, by the act of Monroe county, and Monroe county frittering away her choice by her own act, and her own vincing to compel him to take another article, of the clearly, and emphatically, expressed home feuds.
