One Ghost Explained.

In a famous haunted house on the road between Yellow Springs and Xenia, Ohio, superstitious exhibtions were specially noted. The people about that region hesitated to speak about the place, and its peculiarities were mentioned in whispers. Hence my curiosity was aroused, and after preparing myself to resist any danger that might occur from the presence of a desperate character, I proceeded to the place and provided an excellent point for viewing the premises. It would have been a tedious business to wait until midnight, the time when ghosts are said to appear. But I did not have to wait so long. About eleven o'clock a warm stream of air blew up from the south over a creek and a quarter of a mile or more of rich, black, warm bottom land. As the vapor struck the hillside it condensed, and little flying balloons of mist flew hither and thither. The warm air lingered over and fermented an old pile of compost, decaying straw and a few old boards that were lying about. Then there arose a vaporous, luminous body, which, with its base on the ground and conical or round, fiery, cloud-like head in the air, took the shape of a woman. Crimson and livid blood-like spots and streaks were about her neck and scattered over her dress. She waved her hands, and her hair floated about in clouds of light, while her eyes glittered like the cold moon. Rising slowly from her hideous bed, the specter moved hither and thither, as if the wind toyed with her, and she cared not whither she was taken. At last she started as if to visit me in my retreat; then turning a corner of the stable, she nearly disappeared, there being nothing left visible but a long dirty-white train.

In a moment the phantom turned again, and crept into the broken doorway, stooping as she retired. Several minutes elapsed, and concluding that she had collapsed or worn out her vaporous strength, I was in the act of leaving the place, when she came out through the opening of the doorway and crevices between the logs. Then after walking or floating about for a while, her light went out, and she became thinner and finally disappeared. The shape of the apparition was such that it was easy for an imaginative person to see in it the form of a sad-faced or angryeyed restless woman. Then how easy to create a legned filled wi h details of a mysterious murder, and make this the unhappy victim, whose shadow must haunt the place of her taking off until her manes are appeased in some legal and effective manner.

But my evidence makes this baseless fabric of a vision the mere result of the vaporous exhalations of a compost pile. I had a very fine pair of field-glasses, and could see clearly the effects produced by the stream of air when it came in contact with the compost. The vapor began at that moment to rise, and this result would occur at all seasons. Then the luminous jets and variegated colors sprang up from the warm laboratory wherein natures' chemistry was at work, and finally the vaporous cloud, which really had no definite shape, was carried at the caprice of the soft zephyr winds which flitted about, and did not blow sufficiently strong to carry this heavier body out of the regular draughts through the openings of the dilapidated house.—Lippincott's.

A FORGER'S LEGACY.

Heavy Robberies Unearthed by a Search Through Van Etten's Trunks—Wall Street Operators Arrested.

When Van Etten, the forger, committed suicide in Hudson City on Saturday, August 1, Captain Lees, Chief of the Detective Corps of San Francisco, who had secured his arrest, and was about going with him to San Francisco, took charge of his effects and searched his trunks. Among the papers which he discovered was a $1000 bond of the town of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin. Concluding that Van Etten could not be in possession of the bond honestly Captain Lees went with it to the Mechanics Bank of New York, where the coupons upon the bond had been made payable. There he learned that the interest had been paid to Harriott & Noyes, of No. 19 Wall street, and from them he learned that the bond of that number had become the property, twelve years ago, of A. O. Burton of Burlington, Vt. Captain Lees thereupon communicated with Mr. Burton and secured that gentleman's presence in New York on Saturday last. Mr. Burton stated that he had been robbed about ten months ago by burglars of $15,000 in place and jewels, and the following amount of stocks and bonds:—25 shares (100 each) of Harlem Bank stock, 562 shares of Cumberland Coal and Iron Company stock, $500 in shares Cumberland Coal and Mining Co., 10 shares of the Northern Transportation Company, and the $1000 bond of Fond du Lac, Wis., referred to. The night after he was robbed, Judge Barber, of St. Albans, Vt., was also robbed, losing about $2,000 in plate and money, and the night succeeding that, Judge Reeder, of Montpelier, suffered similarly, though in smaller amount. Mr. Burton proved his claim to the Fond du Lac stock and received it, but expressed a willingness to remain and assist Captain Lees in securing, if possible, a clue to the rest of the stolen property. A visit to the Harlem Bank resulted in securing information that the stolen bank stock had been transferred to a man named Cassidy, on his being certified to as the genuine holder of the bonds by Marcus T. Sacia, broker of No. 17 Wall street. Further inquiry in Wall street led to the discovery that Sacia had introduced Cassidy to John Devere, another operator in Wall street, and at Cassidy's request undertook to negotiate the sale of the bonds. Captain Lees and Mr. Burton spent Monday in Wall street, trying to find the stolen bonds or bidding for them to any sidewalk operator whom they met, but without success. Tuesday morning they were more successful. They met a broker named Abraham Whipple, to whom they stated their desire to purchase Harlem Bank stock, and who offered very readily to negotiate the purchase for them. He took them to Devere's office, where the identical bonds were produced. Captain Lees immediately put in Detectives Farley and Sampson, who had been on his track all day, and Devere and Whipple were both taken into custody. Subsequently, Sacia was arrested at his office, and Cassidy, on inquiry, was found to have been a prisoner in Ludlow Street Jail for several days on another charge. The three men were brought to the New York Central Office yesterday afternoon, searched, and consigned to the cells to be arraigned at the Tombs' Police Court.

An exchange gives the following "case of conscience: Messrs. Frank, Bro. & Co., merchants 3d street, Philadelphia, had a pleasant surprise. Thirty-three years ago they kept store in New Berlin, Union county, and before moving to the city they were robbed of goods to the amount of $400. Last week a man came into their store, and ascertaining that they were the same gentlemen that kept store in New Berlin informed them that he was ready to pay the $400 they missed in the robbery, together with the interest npon the same, which would amount to $800. Mr. Frank was astonished at the man's frankness, but told him if he would give him the $400 without interest, they would call it square, which he paid over and departed, leaving the proprietors to ruminate upon the singular phases of humanity.
