A Lesson Worth Reading.
Recently a gentleman of Boston entered the baggage care of an outward train, and desiring to read some manuscript, he chose this car because it was airy and retired. A youngster about 15 years of age was occupying with great abandon, a chair. The gentleman wishing to sit near the open door of the car, to obtain more light and air, thus accosted the youngster.
"Bub, will you exchange that chair for my seat, a few minutes?"
"No, sir; this chair is engaged."
The gentleman was very polite, as he recognized the young man's right to the chair by actual possession. It appears that he was temporarily in charge of some express matter, his father being the expressman on the route, but the moral of the incident we shall give in relating another incident, which occurred very many years ago.
There was a very plainly dressed elderly lady who was a frequent customer at the then leading dry goods store in Boston. No one in the store knew her even by name. All the clerks but one avoided her and gave their attention to those who were better dressed and more pretentious. The exception was this young man who had a conscientious regard for duty and system. He never left another customer to wait on the lady, but when a liberty he waited upon her with as much attention as though she had been a princess. This continued for a year or so until the young man became of age. One morning the lady approached the young man, when the following conversation took place:
Lady—"Young man do you not wish to go into business for yourself?"
"Yes, ma'am; but I have neither money, credit, nor friends, nor will any one trust me."
"Well, you go and select a good situation, ask what the rent is, and report to me," handing the young man her address.
The young man went, found a capital location, a good store, but the landlord required security which he could not give. Mindful of the lady's request, he forthwith went to her and reported his doings.
"Well, you go and tell Mr. ——— that I will be responsible."
He went and the landlord or agent was surprised, but the bargain was closed. The next day the lady called to ascertain the result. The young man told her, but added, "What am I to do for goods? No person will trust me."
"You may go and see Mr. ———, and Mr. ———, and Mr. ———, and tell them to call on me."
He did, and his store was soon stocked with the best goods in the market. There are many in the city who remember the circumstances and the man. He died many years since and left a fortune of three hundred thousand dollars. So much for politeness, so much for civility, and so much for treating one's elders with the deference due to age in whatever garb they are clothed. Now this gentleman in the baggage car might have been a director of the road or a very influential man otherwise, and as he is a very observing man and a good judge of character, a different answer from the youngster might have interested him in his behalf and lead to some future advantage.
An Incident With a Moral.
Some years ago, when defalcations of bank officers were not so frequently made public as at present, a young gentleman was invited temporarily to fill the place of an absconding teller of a prominent bank, who had neglected to square up his accounts before leaving. One day not long after a check for a large amount, signed by the president of the bank, was presented at the counter by one of the clerks. The president had no such amount on deposit, and the clerk was politely informed of the fact by the teller, and that, of course, the check could not be paid. "But it must be," said the clerk; "I cannot help that." Said the pro tem-pore officer, "There are no funds to meet it." "I'll see if you won't pay it," said the clerk, who at once carried the dishonored check to his principal, then in the directors' room. That official hastily appeared behind the counter, and in no gentlemanly manner demanded why his check had not been paid. "No funds." "That makes no difference. You know I could make it good in a few hours. You must pay it." "Sir, I shall pay no check unless the funds are here to back it," said the teller firmly. "Then I will cash it myself," said the president, proceeding as if to do so, from the piles of money before him. "Sir," said the teller, "I am held responsible for that money, and if you touch a dollar of it, you do it at your peril. But when my accounts for the day are made up and accepted, you may take the whole for all I care." The president used some very strong language and retreated to the directors' room, and told how "that impudent fellow" had refused to honor his check. A brief talk with his associates showed him that the teller was right. One of the directors who had funds loaned his check to cover the emergency, as the president's note for ten times the amount would have been promptly discounted if he had asked it; and the teller, supposing his time was up, carefully prepared his accounts before the time for closing, and presented them to the president, saying he supposed he was to leave after what had passed. "No, sir," said the president, "you are not going. You were right and I was wrong."
Moral.—If all bank cashiers and tellers could have the firmness and grit to refuse all over-drafts of their directors and other powerful customers, we should hear of but very few defalcations of those officers; and if directors always conformed strictly to their own rules, and were moderately careful in looking after the books of their officers, there would be little inducement and less opportunity for such defalcations to continue for any series of years.—Worcester Spy.

Preparing Fish for Winter.
It is estimated that at present there are stored in New York city about 250,000 pounds of valuable fish in a frozen state for next winter. These stores will not be touched while freshly caught fish can be brought to market. Terrapin is one of the luxuries of the table. Those who catch them have to hunt for them as far south as Galveston, and Savannah, Ga., and Charleston, S. C., furnish supplies, and some very fine terrapin are caught in the Chesapeake Bay, and are eagerly purchased at Baltimore, where they have been sold as high as $45 per dozen. In order to get anything like a supply for the New York market, a leading wholesale fish dealer found it necessary, several years ago, to lay in a stock during the summer, at which time, in consequence of their voracity, the terrapin are more easily caught. As it is necessary to preserve the terrapin alive, he caused a large pen to be constructed on the shore of Pleasure Bay, near Long Branch, about 100 feet square, constructed with a fence of plank 8 inches wide, 2 1/2 inches thick, and of ordinary length. The bottom and shore was artificially constructed so as to give it a gradual slope, and the shore was made of white sea sand, while the bed of the pen was composed of ordinary sea mud and sand. Here for three or four years past the fish dealer stored his terrapin, sometimes having as many as 10,000 terrapin in the pen at one time. As the food they appear most to enjoy can be easily had, the cost of maintaining the pens is small; while the revenue, should he scheme prove moderately successful, will be very great, as even good fat terrapin bring in this market from $8 to $15 per dozen.

Marriage Outright.
From an old Carolina periodical we clip an anecdote that happily illustrates the custom of the period when physical force was the tribunal before which all questions were brought for arbitration.
In one of the upper counties of North Carolina a young fellow by the name of Ben Sykes had courted a fair one for some years, but either was not ready or willing as he never came to the point.
At last she got mad, and declared she would marry Bill Patterson if he ever courted her again.
Bill, hearing this, went and once more put in his claim; but he was a scurvy fellow in some things, and neither dad nor man was willing.
So he secretly goes to B., gets a license, and that night they made off for a Gretna squire.
On their road to happiness, however, who should they meet but Ben Sykes. He got an inkling of what was going on and when he met them he understood how the case lay.
"Sally," says he, "I've fooled with you, that's a fact, and I'm sorry for it. But if you still prefer me to Bill Patterson, just say so and I will give him a thrashing, take his license and make Moody marry us tonight.
The old love was too strong for the new. Ben gave Bill a thrashing, took his gal, and (what he hated most) his license, which cost him seventy-five cents, and was off with his plunder to Moody's.
The old Squire did not so well understand how one man could be married in virtue of a license granted to another.
Ben said he did not himself understand law quibbles, but this he knew, that unless he did it, he (the squire, would ketch it too.) The hint was enough for Moody, who, without much ado, pronounced them man and wife.

Who Knows Him?
John Collins, an old soldier at the Soldier's Home, Dayton, Ohio, especially desires to learn the address of Dr. R. B. McKay, who in 1862 was a surgeon in charge of the hospital at Hampton, Va., and afterwards at Norfolk, Va. He writes to the Postmaster at Easton inquiring concerning Dr. McKay, whom he has reason to think is in Pennsylvania somewhere. Our contemporaries will be doing a kindly act to an old crippled soldier by giving his request for information as wide publicity as possible.

Lewis Stucker has been found guilty of murder in the second degree at Wilkesbarre. McDermott, who killed Haley, the jury found guilty of insanity. He will be sent to the asylum. Sharkey, who tried to kill the mine boss, Green, gets six years and eight months solitary confinement at hard labor.
Mr. Hiram Seaton, living near Harrisville, Butler county, has a goose over thirty years old which has laid six dozen eggs this season. A healthy old goose, that.

A lager beer stand at the Berks county fair paid the society $100 per day, and each day $1,000 worth of beer was sold. The drought must have been pretty severe.

Pick-pockets, sneak-thieves, burglars and other classes of marauders are numerous in all parts of the State.
