Forest Trees.

Every day reveals some new evidence of the thoughtless and foreboding destruction of forest trees throughout the country. Forty years ago there could be found in Indiana a crop of black walnut unequalled in quantity and quality, but to-day it is not to be found in such immense trees, neither is the number of trees by any means so numerous. The largest and best trees were used years ago for fence rails and such common purposes; then it had no particular commercial value. Before walnut came into general use, the most of domestic furniture was made of cherry walnut has now entirely superseded this and all other woods. Thousands of fence rails can be found to-day through Indiana that were split more than half a century ago, and they are as sound now as then, save the wear and tear. Of all hard woods the walnut is the most durable, save red cedar, and possibly, in the ground, black locust would equal it. Our walnut is comparatively gone. In isolated parts of the country, where this timber grows, there is yet of some inferior quality, but to a limited extent. But the black walnut growing in the deep forest, in the rich lowlands, in its primitive nature, is a thing of the past The general supply must now be gathered from the four quarters of the earth to supply the demand. Kentucky has quite a stock of good walnut yet, though much that is very inferior on account of its gray color, and tough, hard texture. Missouri also has some of rather an inferior quality. Western Ohio claims good walnut, but that of Eastern Ohio and West Virginia is poor perpetual. The first ten years are goledn Oscar Merrill, of Lower Mt. Bethel town- in quality. Misplaced Sympathy.

There is constant sympathy expressed by robust people for those of slight physical constitution. We think the sympathy ought to turn in the opposite direction. It is the delicate people who escape the most fearful disorders, and, in three cases out of four, live the longest. Those of gigantic structure are almost always reckless of County Prison, in Philadelphia, last Wedhealth.
