In one instance a mortar was found standing upright, with the pestle in it, apparently just as it had been left by its owner. In some cases the mortars have found at the depth of forty feet from the surface of the gaivel underlying Table Mountain. The distribution of the mortars is such as to indicate with great positiveness the former existence of a human settlement on that ancient beach when the water ed stood near the level at which they occur; a time anterior to the volcanic outpouring which Table Mountain records, and anterior The recent geological history of that region may be briefly summed as follows : then (it requires nerve to do, though,) just | Previous to the placing the mortars in the take a razor or lancet and lay it open to the position in which they have been found, the bone, and cut the core right out by the early and middle tertiory sea level had receded to the position of the coal beds un-I suggested veins and arteries, and he derlying Table Mountain, fully one thousaw at once that I hadn't any nerve.
