A correspondent at Donaldson writes to the Pottsville Journal as follows about a wonderful piece of mechanism: Talk about that great apostolic clock which was on exhibition in Pottsville some time ago, and which is now before the public at some other place! It cannot compare with the wonderful piece of mechanism which has been made by a man of our place. This also is in the shape of a clock. It is a tank to represent the sea, and in it is a large whale as natural looking as life. A ship in distress appears on the sea, and the crew are in the act of throwing a man overboard. The whale comes up out of the water, and as its head appears its mouth gradually opens until it reaches the man thrown out of the ship, when it suddenly swallows him up. No deception is practiced. The man passes down the whale's throat, and the at two cents per head and make enough on whale sinks into the tank. Simultaneously a figure representing an angel appears in a cloud and hovers around the place where the whale appeared. After the lapse of three-quarters of a minute the whale reappears, and gradually opening his mouth casts the man out upon the shore. At this the angel and cloud disappear, and a figure representing God appears near the man.
