

The Erie Road is to have a third rail to New York, and finally, as the machinery and cars wear out, to be reduced to a narrow gauge road. Receiver Jewett laid the proposition before the English stockholders, and they accepted it.

For the Jeffersonian. "The course of human events" is full of double dealing, treachery and hypocrisy. It is found in all ages, sexes and conditions of society. It lurks in the palaces of emperors and kings as well as in the hovels of the peasant; in the pulpit, and in the broader sphere of the statesman and diplomat.

This trait of the human character has met with the general condemnation of all ages. The philosopher has moralized over it, the poet scorned it, the pulpit anathematized it, and popular indignation dragged those who obtained power by it in the dust; yet it has ever found its excusers and defenders.

Brutus with a treacherous hand murdered his friend for his country's good, and obtained absolution from the gods. King Richard "stole the liver of Heaven" to perform his treacherous and bloody deeds to acquire a throne. Beecher stands charged with treachery and hypocrisy yet boldly preaches the gospel, as is claimed, by some, for the honor of the American pulpit and clergy.

Nearer home a humble individual was found, and entrusted with certain powers to be exercised for the benefit of a friend; but when the crisis came, he was found brute-like directing those powers against his friend, for his country—and his own good—thus at a single leap bounding from obscurity into fame. As time advanced ten thousand voices were heard crying "well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into our house and partake of the goodness therein. From this apex of greatness (?) he discerned that the verb partake is a declinable adjective—partaken—partaker—partakest and he partooked superlatively. In order to avert a storm on storms of indignation, he quietly retired into his new house with feelings of disgust at the obtuseness of his countryman. It was hoped that time, the obliterator of all things, had buried even this in oblivion, and the orthodox elevated him to the chief priest hood of the most orthodox, but between the folds of the bright and glowing mantle of reform in which he is wrapped are seen his dirty fingers spotted with partooked.—Bah.

ON THE FENCE.

Tribute of Respect.

At a regular meeting of Minneola Lodge, No. 365, K. of P., held August 12, 1876, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted: WHEREAS, An allwise Providence has in his infinite wisdom removed from us by death our esteemed brother, Charles H. Hinton, one of the charter members and Past Chancellors of Minneola Lodge, No. 365, and at the same time K. of R. and S. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That whilst we bow in humble submission to the will of our heavenly Father, we feel we have lost a kind and noble brother, a pleasant companion, and that we will ever cherish him in grateful remembrance, and strive to emulate his good virtues.

Resolved, That by his death we are reminded of the great truth, "In the midst of life we are in death," and that the arrow of the insatiable archer in its unerring mission, has stricken one whom we had just reason to believe would be useful and fraternal in his relation to our noble Order.

Resolved, That we sincerely sympathize with the bereaved family in their sad affliction, and may the God of grace and mercy support and bless his family and cover their defenseless heads with the shadow of his Almighty wings.

Resolved, That our charter be draped in mourning for ninety days.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread on the minutes, and published in the JEFFERSONIAN and Monroe Democrat, and a copy to be engrossed and properly framed and sent to the bereaved family.

The Phillipsburg Journal says a child in Boggs township, Centre county, swallowed two dozen potato bugs and was none the worse for it.

A New Jersey Court of Pardons refuses to make known the names of the objects of their clemency, giving as a reason that the fact of the pardon of a recreant father or son was, in most cases, the first intimation their families would receive that they had been in prison.

The New York Tribune says of the Belknap impeachment case that "if justice has been cheated in the result, it is due to the bungling management of Mr. Clymer and his committee."

There was an old man named Tilden Who ogled the White House building; But the people say "Nay; Out of it you must stay," And then they sat down on Sam Tilden.

There was an old man in Indiana, Put up with old Sam on the banner; Both wanted to rule, Some one was made fool, And that's what's the matter with Hannah.

Ex-Governor Dix, of New York, thus writes to the New York Tribune upon the silver question:

One of your correspondents lays great stress upon the consideration that the adoption of the silver dollar as a standard at its present value, and making it a legal tender, would impair the obligation of contracts, which, he says, the Government has no right to do. What, then, does he think of the course of the Government in making paper without any intrinsic value a legal tender in the payment of individual debts? A measure which the Supreme Court of the United States (as I conceive, most erroneously and arbitrarily) has pronounced in accordance with the Constitution.

If we were not pledged to resumption of specie payments, there is no intelligent creditor who would not prefer that the legal tender quality should be conferred on silver rather than on paper. There is no limit to the possible depreciation of paper money, whereas silver is not likely to fall still lower in price; and, but for the suspension of fractional currency for coins less than a dollar, it would probably not have reached its present depression in price, which is, no doubt, in some degree artificial. I am not a capitalist, but I am a creditor; and I do not hesitate to say that I would gladly accept silver as a legal tender, if the act of Congress conferring that quality on Government paper were repealed—thus taking the chances of an appreciation of the former and of a further decline in the latter.

A LAWLESS OUTBREAK.

A Man's House Besieged. POTTSVILLE, Pa., August 14.—This afternoon Michael Brennan and John Cook attacked with stones the house of William Roeder, at Oakland. One of Roeder's daughters being severely injured by one of the stones, he became incensed and fired at the assailants, instantly killing Brennan. Cook was arrested and Roeder gave himself up.

The Coal Combination.

It is stated that the coal ring has patched up a compromise, and will raise the price for the coming winter. In order to lessen the supply it is arranged to stop mining for two weeks in August, thus throwing the loss upon the workmen, while they increase the price to consumers. Nothing could be more unjust. Coal, like every thing else, must go down. The miners are clamoring for steady work; the people demand lower rates for coal. Steady work at the mines will give us cheap coal, and cheap coal will increase manufacturing activity by lessening the cost of production. There are some signs that the coal monopoly will be unable to successfully harmonize its various interests and stem the tide of public opinion. Judge Asa Packer, President of the Lehigh Valley Company, is not satisfied with the present arrangement, and is in favor of lower prices. Should he withdraw the combination would speedily dissolve, and the people get their winter's coal at fair rates. Meanwhile the whole public is growing impatient under this arbitrary dictation. With abundance of coal, miners anxious for work, and a fair demand at reasonable prices, these monopolists shut up the mines, impoverish the workmen and overcharge the public. It can scarcely be possible that so unnatural and unrighteous a state of affairs can be permanent.—Exchange.

When the blind follow the blind they both fall into the ditch together. But we have since learned that the ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Wallace of this place.

If the New York hotels succeed in this, those of the other cities will follow, unless the high rents they are now paying will prevent it.

What has Become of the Potato Bugs?

Now that the potato bug has disappeared from Lehigh and adjoining counties, some little interest is aroused as to what part of the country is favored with their visits. Does the following, from an exchange, answer the query? A day or two ago a party of gentlemen fishing near the middle of Long Island Sound, saw great quantities of potato bugs covering the surface of the water as far as the eye could reach. Every floating article, as well as the water, was packed with them, and many were clinging to eelgrass and seaweed under the water. The wind was blowing from the south, and had probably carried them from the island, and they were being wafted to the Connecticut shore. Inland on the island the bugs appear to be increasing in numbers, and the potato vines being dry, they have attacked the egg plants, pepper plants, and tomato vines.

Prickly heat is an annoying complaint from which very few people are exempt during very warm weather. A little sudor from strong carbolic soap, rubbed upon the excoriated surface, it is said will speedily allay the irritation and restore the skin to its natural appearance.

A Snake Nearly 10 Feet Long.

Owen Deetz, employed at the Three Mile House, Cumru township, with a number of others were in Yocum's woods a few days ago. They had a small dog with them. During the afternoon the dog was heard barking at a furious rate, and Mr. Deetz went to see what the matter was. When he got there he saw a large snake coiled twice around the trunk of a tree, and it was hissing and fighting for life with the dog. Mr. Deetz dispatched the black reptile with a stone, and when stretched out it measured nine feet four inches long. This is stated to be no fancy measurement, but is represented to be straight and right. The snake was thin considering its great length, and it had two white spots on the back of its head, just forward the neck. It is said to be the longest snake of the kind ever killed in that section, the measurement of which was to be relied upon.

The Indian Campaign.

A correspondent writing from headquarters on Goose Creek, on the 3d of August, says:—"General Crook's forces could pass over the roughest country without further replenishing to the Missouri river on the north, Wind river on the southwest, or the Indian agencies on the southeast. Men and horses have been severely drilled daily for the past month, the force composing the Fifth Cavalry has long been trained to firing on horseback. Men and animals are in superb condition. There is comparatively no sickness among the former, and the latter have been thoroughly toughened to this kind of work. This is undoubtedly the strongest, finest-equipped and best-fitted expedition yet sent against our savage foe. The Shoshone allies are led by their great chief, Washaki, in person. All lead extra war ponies, which are remarkable for fine appearance and fleetness. A small white flag worn on top of the war bonnet, a scalp lock will in battle distinguish these warriors from enemy. These, as well as a few Ute warriors present, are the flower of their tribes. More Utes are now on the way hither. Some Bamocks are also looked for."

The Smallest of the Girls.

A large number of physicians went on Monday to see the Mexican dwarf, Lucia Zarate. They measured her, and ascertained her height to be 21 inches, her feet three inches long, her legs below the knees to be 4 inches in circumference, and her hands an inch and a quarter broad. Her mother, who is robust and of a medium size, says that Lucia is twelve years old. Her face is older than that. Her features are Spanish, and her complexion dark. Her activity is incessant. She played pranks with the physicians and talked fast in Spanish. She stepped into a high silk hat, crouched down, and was out of sight excepting her head. She squeezed one of her pliable little hands through a rather large finger ring. The hands of an adult made an ample seat for her. Standing on a chair, and holding to the back of it, her fingers stalk through the spaces in the canework—holes that just permitted the passage of a small penholder. She was not weighed, but her weight is said to be five pounds; and, poised in the hand, she does not seem heavier. Her clothing is comically small, as though intended for a doll, the shoes and stockings especially being toylike. Tom Thumb has grown appreciably since he was exhibited by Barnum, but when he first astonished the public he was twice as big as Lucia, and he was then her present age. She has not grown any, her mother says, since she was a year old.
