

H. B. MASSER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

OFFICE, CORNER OF CENTRE ALLEY & MARKET STREET.

A Family Newspaper—Devoted to Politics, Literature, Morality, Foreign and Domestic News, Science and the Arts, Agriculture, Markets, Amusements, &c.

NEW SERIES VOL. 1, NO. 17.

SUNBURY, NORTHUMBERLAND COUNTY, PA., SATURDAY, JULY 22, 1848.

OLD SERIES VOL. 8, NO. 43.

TERMS OF THE AMERICAN.

THE AMERICAN is published every Saturday at TWO DOLLARS per annum in advance...

H. B. MASSER, ATTORNEY AT LAW, SUNBURY, PA.

P. & A. ROYCE, LOWES & BARBER, SOLE AGENTS...

PORTER & ENGLISH, GROCERS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS...

THE CHEAP BOOK STORE, DANIELS & SMITH'S...

WM G MASON, 46 Chestnut St. 3 doors above 2nd St., Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, where they will always keep on hand a complete assortment of Patent Elastic Carriage Oil Cloths...

COUNTRY MERCHANTS, Can save from 15 to 25 per Cent. By purchasing their OIL CLOTHS direct from the Manufacturers...

MEYER'S, THE SUBSCRIBER has been appointed agent for the sale of CONRAD MEYER'S CELEBRATED PREMIUM ROSE WOOD PIANOS...

GEMS OF POESY.

BUENA VISTA. BY CHARLES FERRO HOFFMAN. [Supposed to be written by a Mexican prisoner within the American lines at Saltillo.]

We saw their watch-fires through the night Light up the far horizon's verge; We heard at dawn the gathering fight, Swell like the distant ocean surge...

THE DEATHS OF THE ARCHBISHOP AND M. LAROCHE. We copy from the New York papers received last evening, the following additional details of the dreadful intelligence received from France...

ARRIVAL OF THE NIAGARA. SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE. IMPORTANT NEWS! BLOODY CONFLICT IN PARIS.

On Saturday night the state of the capital was awful. Troops were pouring in from the neighboring apartments. The red flag of the Socialists was raised, and the fighting continued...

On Monday the reinforcements Gen. Lamoriciere had received from Cavagnac enabled him to route the insurgents in the eastern part of the city, and although reduced to extremities they still fought with incredible valor...

On Tuesday the insurrection was definitely quelled. The loss of life has been terrific, no fewer than fourteen general officers had been put hors de combat—a greater loss than in the most splendid engagements of Napoleon...

On Saturday, the Assembly declared its session permanent. The Government resigned the supreme executive power, which was given to Gen. Cavagnac, who declared Paris in a state of siege.

On Saturday night the state of the capital was awful. Troops were pouring in from the neighboring apartments. The red flag of the Socialists was raised, and the fighting continued...

On Monday the reinforcements Gen. Lamoriciere had received from Cavagnac enabled him to route the insurgents in the eastern part of the city, and although reduced to extremities they still fought with incredible valor...

On Tuesday the insurrection was definitely quelled. The loss of life has been terrific, no fewer than fourteen general officers had been put hors de combat—a greater loss than in the most splendid engagements of Napoleon...

On Saturday, the Assembly declared its session permanent. The Government resigned the supreme executive power, which was given to Gen. Cavagnac, who declared Paris in a state of siege.

On Thursday night, barricades were erected, and the National Guard turned out. The insurgents seized all that portion of the city about the Faubourg St. Antoine, and threatened the Hotel de Ville.

On Friday, there was some fighting, in which the insurgents were successful. Lamoriciere rode with the staff of Gen. Cavagnac to quell the insurrection, but without effect.

On Saturday, the Assembly declared its session permanent. The Government resigned the supreme executive power, which was given to Gen. Cavagnac, who declared Paris in a state of siege.

The whole day was spent in fighting, except a lull during a thunder storm. The war of artillery and musketry was terrible.

On Saturday night the state of the capital was awful. Troops were pouring in from the neighboring apartments. The red flag of the Socialists was raised, and the fighting continued...

On Monday the reinforcements Gen. Lamoriciere had received from Cavagnac enabled him to route the insurgents in the eastern part of the city, and although reduced to extremities they still fought with incredible valor...

On Tuesday the insurrection was definitely quelled. The loss of life has been terrific, no fewer than fourteen general officers had been put hors de combat—a greater loss than in the most splendid engagements of Napoleon...

On Saturday, the Assembly declared its session permanent. The Government resigned the supreme executive power, which was given to Gen. Cavagnac, who declared Paris in a state of siege.

On Thursday night, barricades were erected, and the National Guard turned out. The insurgents seized all that portion of the city about the Faubourg St. Antoine, and threatened the Hotel de Ville.

On Friday, there was some fighting, in which the insurgents were successful. Lamoriciere rode with the staff of Gen. Cavagnac to quell the insurrection, but without effect.

On Saturday, the Assembly declared its session permanent. The Government resigned the supreme executive power, which was given to Gen. Cavagnac, who declared Paris in a state of siege.

The whole day was spent in fighting, except a lull during a thunder storm. The war of artillery and musketry was terrible.

On Saturday night the state of the capital was awful. Troops were pouring in from the neighboring apartments. The red flag of the Socialists was raised, and the fighting continued...

On Monday the reinforcements Gen. Lamoriciere had received from Cavagnac enabled him to route the insurgents in the eastern part of the city, and although reduced to extremities they still fought with incredible valor...

On Tuesday the insurrection was definitely quelled. The loss of life has been terrific, no fewer than fourteen general officers had been put hors de combat—a greater loss than in the most splendid engagements of Napoleon...

On Saturday, the Assembly declared its session permanent. The Government resigned the supreme executive power, which was given to Gen. Cavagnac, who declared Paris in a state of siege.

On Thursday night, barricades were erected, and the National Guard turned out. The insurgents seized all that portion of the city about the Faubourg St. Antoine, and threatened the Hotel de Ville.

On Friday, there was some fighting, in which the insurgents were successful. Lamoriciere rode with the staff of Gen. Cavagnac to quell the insurrection, but without effect.

On Saturday, the Assembly declared its session permanent. The Government resigned the supreme executive power, which was given to Gen. Cavagnac, who declared Paris in a state of siege.

The whole day was spent in fighting, except a lull during a thunder storm. The war of artillery and musketry was terrible.

On Saturday night the state of the capital was awful. Troops were pouring in from the neighboring apartments. The red flag of the Socialists was raised, and the fighting continued...

On Monday the reinforcements Gen. Lamoriciere had received from Cavagnac enabled him to route the insurgents in the eastern part of the city, and although reduced to extremities they still fought with incredible valor...

On Tuesday the insurrection was definitely quelled. The loss of life has been terrific, no fewer than fourteen general officers had been put hors de combat—a greater loss than in the most splendid engagements of Napoleon...

On Saturday, the Assembly declared its session permanent. The Government resigned the supreme executive power, which was given to Gen. Cavagnac, who declared Paris in a state of siege.

On Thursday night, barricades were erected, and the National Guard turned out. The insurgents seized all that portion of the city about the Faubourg St. Antoine, and threatened the Hotel de Ville.

On Friday, there was some fighting, in which the insurgents were successful. Lamoriciere rode with the staff of Gen. Cavagnac to quell the insurrection, but without effect.

On Saturday, the Assembly declared its session permanent. The Government resigned the supreme executive power, which was given to Gen. Cavagnac, who declared Paris in a state of siege.

The whole day was spent in fighting, except a lull during a thunder storm. The war of artillery and musketry was terrible.

On Saturday night the state of the capital was awful. Troops were pouring in from the neighboring apartments. The red flag of the Socialists was raised, and the fighting continued...

On Monday the reinforcements Gen. Lamoriciere had received from Cavagnac enabled him to route the insurgents in the eastern part of the city, and although reduced to extremities they still fought with incredible valor...

On Tuesday the insurrection was definitely quelled. The loss of life has been terrific, no fewer than fourteen general officers had been put hors de combat—a greater loss than in the most splendid engagements of Napoleon...

On Saturday, the Assembly declared its session permanent. The Government resigned the supreme executive power, which was given to Gen. Cavagnac, who declared Paris in a state of siege.

On Thursday night, barricades were erected, and the National Guard turned out. The insurgents seized all that portion of the city about the Faubourg St. Antoine, and threatened the Hotel de Ville.

On Friday, there was some fighting, in which the insurgents were successful. Lamoriciere rode with the staff of Gen. Cavagnac to quell the insurrection, but without effect.

On Saturday, the Assembly declared its session permanent. The Government resigned the supreme executive power, which was given to Gen. Cavagnac, who declared Paris in a state of siege.

The whole day was spent in fighting, except a lull during a thunder storm. The war of artillery and musketry was terrible.