

HISTORICAL.

Pleasing Reminiscences of the GREAT AND GOOD JEFFERSON. We find the following in the Blairsville Apalochian:

In the summer of 1821 I boarded a few weeks at the hotel now kept by Col. H. Buehler, in Harrisburg, then called Mrs. Buehler's, as the mother of Col. B. was then living, whose kindness and amiable disposition will be remembered by all who frequented her house; and more especially if they were on the sick list, or required any attention to increase their comfort.

At that time Gen. Heister was Governor of Pennsylvania, and Andrew Gregg Secretary of the Commonwealth; Mr. Gregg also made his home at Mrs. Buehler's.

It often occurred that gentlemen who stopped at Mrs. B's sought Mr. Gregg's company and got into the parlors of the early fathers of the Republic, almost all of whom he had seen and known, and to his relations of matters and things of "old lang syne" were very interesting.

It was on a Saturday afternoon, in August 1821, that a particular friend of Mr. Gregg's, Mr. J. M. Haldeman, dropped in at Mrs. B's, and in the course of their conversation Mr. Gregg related the following little story which impressed me so favorably that I have not forgotten it, although twenty seven years have since elapsed.

It occurred in Washington city, while he was a member of Congress, and Jefferson was President. He had just risen, he said, from the dinner table when a servant announced that two persons on horseback were at the door, who said they were from Pennsylvania, and wished to see "Andy Gregg." Mr. G. went to the door and found a German, from Marietta with his daughter, bound to Virginia to buy land, but who desired him to accompany them to see Mr. Jefferson.

Mr. G. was rather at a loss how to arrange matters, and requested them to alight and have their horses put away. This they declined doing, but said if it was not too far to the President's house, they would go and lead their horses there, as their call must necessarily be very brief. The German's tone was positive, and he would take no other course. They did dismount and all three walked up to the President's, taking their horses along. Mr. J. must have occupied at that time the block of buildings near the capitol, that are still pointed out or were a few years ago, as his residence whilst President.

There was a pailling around the building to which the horses were hitched, and the party proceeded to the main entrance. Mr. Gregg took the lead. After applying the knocker, a colored servant opened the door, but contrived to place himself so as to obstruct the entrance. "I gave him my shoulder" said Mr. Gregg, "and sent him out of the way, so that we all got into the hall. He then told us the President was at dinner; I opened the house well" added Mr. G., "and I knew a room door on our right and invited my friends in, and found seats for them."

"There were folding doors between this room and the dining room, and I heard Mr. Jefferson ask the servant who it was that was in the adjoining room; I also heard him reply that it was Mr. Gregg and two other persons, a man and a woman. Mr. J. then ordered the folding doors to be thrown open, and called me to come in and join him at dinner, and to bring in my friends with me."

"I had dined, but my friends had not—so we all sat down to the table, the old man on Mr. Jefferson's right, the daughter on his left. Mr. Jefferson had the faculty of making every person at ease in his presence, and soon had the old man as well as his daughter, perfectly at home. He was ever fond of mixing and conversing with plain unsophisticated men, and could unbend to them in the easiest imaginable manner. They talked of farming, of the use of plaster of paris, of raising clover, and of stock; meanwhile after dinner, the wine was circulated, it was good wine, and our German was not a bad judge."

"At length he said to Mr. Jefferson, 'I am going to such a place in Virginia, and would like to know the best stopping places. As you are a Virginian, you can tell me, of course. Yes, said Jefferson, I know the road very well, and will give you directions. Then turning to his private secretary, Mr. Cole, he said, Mr. Cole just take your pen and note down what I am about to say.'

He proceeded to name the places, observing to his guest that in Virginia he must not expect to find taverns, as in Pennsylvania; but, said he, I am giving you the names of planters, at whose houses you will be kindly received and well entertained; but they will take no pay. This is our way in Virginia, and you will have to conform to our customs." He went on till he named a lady—"by such a day you will reach Mrs. Dandridge's." "Mrs. Dandridge," said the guest; "is she the Mrs. Dandridge that took sick and died at our school in Marietta, on its way home. Its mother was with it two weeks. I shall be very glad to see her; she was an excellent woman." "It was the very same," said Mr. Jefferson, "and I am glad you think so well of her, for she is my sister." "Your sister," said our Pennsylvanian, "is it possible?" "And forgetting that he was not in his own well stored house, or a Lancaster county tavern, he smote the table with his fist, and cried out, "come, by George, we must have another bottle of wine." "Certainly," said Mr. Jefferson, and it was brought, and the President and his guests chatted till near sun down. But our German said he must be at a certain place that evening, and arose to start. Mr. Jefferson accompanied them to the door, but their horses were gone. This was soon explained, the republican chief had even attended to them. They had been sent to a livery stable and fed. They were brought to the President's, and there, after cordial shaking of hands and kind adieus, the company separated, pleased with the free and social intercourse they had enjoyed; and as regarded our Pennsylvania friend and his daughter, delighted with the kindness and urbanity of the great democratic chief, who in his intercourse with his fellow men was plain, as simple, and as free from artlessness or sham as the humblest man in the nation.
