

NAPOLEON'S PROPHECY.

"Before fifty years," said Napoleon to Las Casas, one day, at St. Helena, "Europe will be republican or Cossack."

Then, if my son is alive, he will be called to the French throne, amidst the acclamations of the people. If he is dead, France will become a republic again; for no hand would dare to grasp a scepter which it could not wield.

The branch of Orleans, though agreeable, is too weak; it clings too much to the other Bourbons, and it will have the same fate, if it does not prefer living as simple citizens, whatever changes arrive.

Once again France will be a republic, and other countries will follow her example.—Germans, Prussians, Poles, Italians, Danes, Swedes and Russians will join her in a crusade in favor of liberty. They will arm against their sovereigns, who will hasten to make them concessions, in order to retain a part of their ancient authority; they will call themselves constitutional kings, possessing limited powers. Thus the feudal system will receive its death-blow; like the ocean mist, it will vanish before the first ray of the sun of liberty.

But things will not rest there. The wheel of revolution will not stop at that point—its impetuosity will increase five fold, and its rapidity in proportion. When a nation recovers part of its rights, it becomes enthusiastic from victory, and having tasted the sweets of liberty, becomes more enterprising, in order to obtain more. The States of Europe will be perhaps for some years in a continual state of agitation, like the ground the moment of an earthquake; but at last the lava breaks forth, and an explosion ends all.

The bankruptcy of England will be the lava which will shake the world, devour kings and aristocracies, and cement by its outbreak the interests of democrats. Believe me, Las Casas, as the vines planted in the ashes which cover the feet of Etna and Vesuvius produce the most delicious wines, so the tree of liberty will become immovable when it has its roots in the revolutionary lava which will overflow all the monarchies.—May it flourish forever! These sentiments may perhaps appear strange to you, but they are mine.

I was born a republican, but destiny and the oppression of Europe made me an Emperor.

THE CHOLERA is still on the decrease in those places where it has raged so dreadful. In Cincinnati there have been, from the 16th ult. to the 16th inst., 2475 deaths by cholera, of which nearly two thirds were foreigners. The entire deaths for the month was 3618, making a daily average mortality of 117. By the last accounts, 19th inst., the interments were less than one hundred per day. It had been nearly two hundred. In St. Louis, also, the pestilence seems to have done its worst, and the number of interments has been reduced to eighty per day. Compared with those of 180 and 189, this is a very favorable change. The deaths in St. Louis since the 8th of June, when the cholera broke out, have been 5,337, of which 3,262 were by cholera. From the 1st of June to the 9th of July, the reports show 3,484 deaths, exhibiting, with its actual population of 54,000, a mortality of 61 in every 1000, or one out of about sixteen, in six weeks. In other places in the South and West the disease appears to be dying away as rapidly as it grew in violence.

LIBERTY, without obedience, is confusion.—Obedience, without Liberty, is slavery.
