A SONG, For the Centennial Celebration of Harvard College. When the Puritans came over

Our hills and swamps to clear, The woods were full of catamounts, And Indians red as deer ; With tomahawks and scalping-knives, That make folks' heads look queer ; O, the ship from England used to bring A hundred wigs a year!

The crows came cawing through the air, To pluck the pilgrims' cora; The bears came snufiling round the door Whene'er a babe was born. The rattlesnakes were bigger round Than the butt of the old ram's horn The deacon blew at the meeting time On every Sabbath morn.

But soon they knocked the wigwam down, And pine tree trunk and limb Began to sprout among the leaves In shape of steeples slim ; And out the little wharves were stretched Along the ocean's rim, And up the little schoolhouse shot, To keep the boys in trim.

And when at length the College rose, The sachem cocked his eye At every tutor's meagre ribs Whose coat-tails whistled by; But, when the Greek and Hebrew Came tumbling from their jaws, The copper-colored children all Ran, screaming, to their squaws.

And who was on the Catalogue When College was begun ? Two nephews of the President, And the Professor's son ! They turned a little Indian boy As brown as any bun;) Lord ! how the seniors knocked about The freshman class of one !

They had not then the dainty things That commons now afford, But succotash and hominy Were smoking on the board ; They did not rattle round in gigs, Or dash in loug tail blues, But always on Commencement days The tutors blacked their shoes.

God bless the ancient Puritans! Their lot was hard enough ; But honest hearts made iron arms, And tender maids are tough ; So love and faith have formed and fed Our true-born Yankee stuff, And keep the kernel on the shell The British found so rough !
