Correspondence of the Phile Ledger LETTER FROM WASHINGTON. Mr. Clay gradualle Sinking-IRs perfect Consciousness and Lively Disposition to the end-Conversation with Mr. Jackson-Gen. Cass' Speech on the Collins Line-New Jersey and Commodore Stockton, WASHINGTON, May 9.

Mr. Clay is sinking very rapidly. He is not troubled with any particular disease, but suffers from general debility, and you must not be surprised, therefore, to hear at any moment of his final dissolution. He knows that he is dving-speaks of it sometimes quite jocosely, and, when told the other day by Dr. Jackson, of Philadelphia, that he should die without being the least conscious of it, and that, too, at no distant period, he observed, with a smile, that "he should like to know the precise hour, merely as a matter of personal gratification to him." He then took a cigar, and smoked it with real gusto. The other day he drew a check on Messrs, Corcoran & Riggs for $500, in as firm a hand as ever, and in his usual clear and legible style. He wrote the whole check without a formula. In a word, Mr. Clay is the same man he always was-the same statesman, politician and tribune-only with less physical force. His big soul has worn the body threadbare, and, peeping through the seams, is anxiously watching for a new vestment. He is not only perfeetly conscious of his own position, but of the position of the country, which he loves with unbounded affection. Among the pub-Cuss.

Gen. Cass' speech on the Collins line of steamers has placed that subject completely on national grounds and is every way worthy of the enlarged views of the experienced and far sighted statesman. The opposition to the Collins line originates, in a great measure with officers of the United States Navy, though the whole steam fleet of the United States does not carry more than 37 guns, all told. A feeling has of late sprung up between the Navy and the United States mail steam service, very much resembling that which has always existed between the officers of the Royal Navy of England and those of the British East India service .-This is much to be regretted. The amendment will pass the Senate by a full two-

The State of New Jersey being claimed by many candidates for the Presidency on her second choice, I deem it not indiscreet to say that, as far as Commodore Stockton is concerned, she will go for Gen. Cass from first to last. So says the gallant old Commodore himself, and he is likely to know .-I do not have this from hearsay; mind you. Commodore Stockton is a frank, high-minded, generous man, who has no idea of entering the parlor through the kitchen door, and scorns all underhand combinations and pettifogging in politics. He is just what one might expect from a gallant American tar, who mounted his sailors in California, and taught them to unhorse the Mexican Lan-

On Tuesday, Mr. Clingman, of North Car-He is ready to support any candidate, Whig or Democratic, who will endorse the Compromise and the Fugitive Slave Law as a finality, though he, himself, did not vote for the Compromise in the last Congress .--Others will, no doubt, follow the example of Mr. Clingman, but I doubt much, whether the movement will become general, even among the Southern Whigs in Congress.

OBSERVER. WASHINGTON, May 10. In the House, the Homestead Bill has made some further progress, and there is really some probability of its passage.-Whether the Senate will have time to act, or fractory movements in the Whig party, it is now pretty well ascertained that the Southern Whigs will cave in, and support Winfield Scott, under any-circumstances. The action of the Union Whigs, in the Cotton States, seems to warrant this belief, which Washington. It is rumored here, in Washington, and I believe truly, that the President intends writing a letter to the effect that he will not allow his name to be used as a candidate for the Presidency, unless the Whigs, in Convention assembled, will first endorse what he has done during his administration of the Government, in regard to the Compromise and the Fugitive Slave Law, and Law as a finality. This is extremely prodent and sagacious, on the part of Mr. Fillmore, and looks mightily to the formation of an independent ticket. I do not believe, however, that such a third party would materially after the issue between the two parties of Whigs and Democrats, which on any previous occasion. There are men North and South ready to endorse Gen. Scott's orthodoxy on the Compromise, and with such an endorsement, the South will not oppose him, after his nomination, especially it, in his letter accepting the nomination, he should come out fully with a declaration of principles.

ARCHBISHOP HUGHES NOT A CARDINAL. A correspondent of the St. Louis Intelligencer, writing from Rome on the 20th of March, notes the creation of four Cardinals and says: "To settle the matter about Bishop Hughes, I may say here that I learn from several sources that the Pope has said that he should appoint none for the United States but a native American, and that the honor was properly due to Maryland, as the State settled by Roman Catholics. There is no talk, at present, of making an American Cardinal, but some Bishop of Baltimore may reasonably expect the honor in the course of a few years."

THE SUSQUEHANNA AND THE SUNBURY

There is scarcely a dissenting opinion in Philadelphia in regard to the great importance of this road to that city, and yet, strange as it may seem, the select council rejected the resolution passed by the common council, authorizing a subscription of one million of dollars to this great enterprise. We confess, we were not much surprised, as Philadelphia has heretofore exhibited such a degree of narrow mindedwhether it will not be talked to death in ness in regard to this improvement, that that body, with fifty other measures, is ex- we never did expect much from her. Some of the city papers regret this very much, as they were anxious to "pre-occupy for a day or two past has become general in the ground of the Susquehanna route" now certain to be made mostly by Baltimore capital. If the object is merely to "preoccupy" in order to prevent the construction of the Susquehanna Rail Road, we are heartily glad that the subscription was not made. We should like much, very much, to see the road from Sunbury to Erie made, though we confess we have not had much then endorse the Compromise and the Slave been previously treated by those who had other. They know they have a greater interest at stake in the Susquehanna road, as that road will place us immediately in connection with Philadelphia and Baltimore. They know that nineteen-twentieths of the passengers and trade from this point will go East, instead of West, to Erie. It is for the same reasons that our friends in Erie feel a deeper interest in the Sunbury and Eric Rail Road, than the roads running West from that place. The completion of the road from Harrisburg to this place and Williamsport, secures to us at once, all we want. SENATOR STOCKTON.

We published an anecdote a few weeks the Navy with some British officer at Gibraltar. A New Orleans correspondent of the Natchez Courier, doubts its correctness and gives the following version of the story. He says:

I rather think, though I may be mistaken, that Mr. Wise has claimed laurels for the faith in the manner in which we have Commodore, which are the property of anwas at Gibraltar, and happened, together with one of his officers, Alex. Wadsworth, to dine in company with some English officers of the garrison. During the conversation, hand of nature has located. We knew the Wadsworth made some remark to which Decater, who was his most intimate friend, replied, by saying in jest, "O, Wadsworth, you lie, you know you do." After dinner when the wine began to circulate freely, Wadsworth requested one of the English officers to drink with him. The latter declined, and his example was followed by his compan ions. On this Wadsworth rose and left the table, and was followed by Decator. The next day they demanded an explanation, and the answer was, that English officers could not consent to take wine with a man who had allowed himself to be called a liar, whether in jest or earnest, without resenting it. Wadsworth immediately challenged the whole of them, six in number, and the challenge was accepted. The parties met outurn wounded by the fourth. Decaur then held him in his arms while he shot the fifth The sixth came forward and made an apolothat they were perfectly satisfied with Mr. Wadsworth's conduct as a gentleman and a man of honor.
