SANTA CLAUS. Shamokin, Dec. 26, 1853 Christmas with its merry peals of laugi ter has visited us once more. Its annual return never fails to call forth a lond shout of welcome. Old and young, alike, join in the heartfelt greeting. How many delightful recollections cluster around the very name of Christmas and Santa Claus. The heart leaps fondly forward to mingle among their ten thousand sacred and glorious associations. How many to whom life has been a constant and perhaps bitter struggle, have here rested from their honest toil, to listen to the "song of the olden time," and fancy themselves once again beneath the roof of the old home, on a Christmas eve, with the happy circle around the blazing fire, listening for the first step of the mysterious but munificent benefactor, Santa Claus. We temember well his first knock at the door, and how we reretreated timidly to our mother's side, while others older and more courageous, helped themselves to the contents of the spacious bag, unmindful of the well directed blows; we heard his footsteps retreating down the street; how bold we became; and laughed at the idea of so good an old gentleman do-then, merry Christmas! Come with your good cheer; Come with your joyous hearts, your smiling faces and your glorious memories. There is none but what will pause awhile to bid you hearty welcome. An incident occurred in our little village, arising from the present advent of Christmas, that is worth recording and remembering, for it was one of those pleasing little episodes that is calculated to soften the rough path of life, and touch all within its range with a happy and mellow influence. Judge Helfensitien, with his usual kind and liberal feeling, extended an invitation to the children of Shamokin to meet him on Saturday morning at the residence of Dr. Atwater. The invitation was readily accepted by over two hundred boys and girls, ranging in age from three to fourteen years. They came with their laughing faces; which with their next appearance and good behavior was a pleasant sight to see. This, I am sure, more than repaid the Judge for his efforts to prepare the entertainment. The room in which the children were received contained a large Christmas tree, full of Martzebaums and otherwise "done up" in the old Dutch fashion; but looking as fresh and beautiful as if it had been transferred from some Fatry realm, and planted there by the Fairy Queen. An hour or more was consumed in examining and admiring the tree, and then the doors of the large drawing rooms connected with the Poctors mansion were thrown open and the children treated to some fine music on the Piano, Flute and Guitar. After this they were shown into an other foom where was extended an immense table, on which were piles of books, cakes, candies, &c. Every boy and girl was presented with a book, and their pockets or handkerchiefs filled with said day. good things. Several ladies were presentwho seemed to draw much delight in helping the children and directing their movements. A gentleman from curiosity kept a register of their names, as each one received their book, also their age, and how many could read and write. It was a gratifying fact, that of the two hundred, one hundred and thirty could read, and one hundred read and write. This reflects great praise on the common school system of our prosperous gent and virtuous community. Thus passed Christmas in Shamokin. The children will long remember it, and in the "good time coming" for Shamokin, may the Judge long live to wish his little friends a "merry Christmas."
