The New York journals have been surmis ing and hinting that some further discoveries respecting the murder of Dr. Burdell are likely to come out of the recent Conningham farce. A New York correspondent of the Boston Journal professes to give some of these new disclosures, cautiously, however, preceding them with the declaration that he does not wish to be held accountable for their

does not wish to be held accountable for their securacy. He says:

Not to be held to too rigid an account for the full correctness of all I have to state—not willing to be held to strict accuracy. I have good autority for saying that probably the reiled mystery of Harvey Burdell's murder will be lifted, and the mystery be dissipated soon; that the durkness of that night of crime will soon blaze with the brightness of crime will soon blaze with the brightness of tice dday; that public morality and public juspe vindicated by the dark and territhe evelutions of that hour of blood; and the uthorities, I am informed have come in-to possession of some most startling devel-pements, which will show that secresy in such great crimes is made impossible by the ws of God.

It will be remembered that no account can be gathered of the manner or place in which Dr. Burdell passed his last night, from the time he took his dinner, at six o'clock at the Metropolitan Hotel, till eleven o'clock, when be was seen to enter his house, at 31 Bond street, on the night be was murdered. All his old haunts have been visited, all his old associates found and examined, all the usual places of resort searched, yet no one saw or heard of him after seven o'clock till be was seen to enter his house at eleven o'clock at bight. The fact was, he was not then alive; he lay on his floor a mangled and stiffened corpse. He was killed soon after he entered his house at 7 o'clock that evening. His pro-bable murderer was seen to go into that house before he came from his dinner; in the scloset he waited for his vistim; with cont and shoes off, he watched for the return of the subject with the intention to garrote him; accomplice and accessory was in waiting in the next room with dagger prepared for a struggle, if needful. It is difficult to strangle a stout, gibletic man, struggling for his dife, and as the struggle comes on, the blade of the assassin is freely used with the desper-ation of a novice and of revenge and des-

The "smell of leather tesatories of interested medical men who have figured in this terrible affair. The man of to his wife will be overnowering. tified" to on the trial, is but another of the blood. The man of blood having done the deed, takes the hat and cloak of Dr. Burdell, slips out the back way, through the lane, into Blocker street, and by concert and agreement, at the proper time—that is, at about 11 o'clock at night, the time of Burdell's usual return-he walks up Bond street, as the Doctor-enters so as to attract attention, and the eridence is regarded as complete. He had personated Burdell at the mock marriage: be had deceived the amiable, yet credulous and unreliable Dr. Marvin, the clergyman who married the parties; he could easily deceive these who saw only his form, the well known h t and clock, at the midnight hour; and when the question is asked, "Where was Dr. Burdell between the hours of 7 and 11 that night?" the answer is, "He was a bloody and stiffened corpse, lying cold in death, and in his own blood, on his office floor, the victim of fourteen stabs by an excited, forious and maddened hand," And when it is said that he "was seen to enter his own house at 11 o'clock" that fatal night, through his front door-the answer is, his hat, cane and cloak went in on the person of the assassin." But Burdell was told in death in that room long before that hour.

The bloody deed done—the clothes burned -the bloody stains washed out as far as possible-the door locked-and all is still-when the men who occupied the rooms, chambers, and upper part of the house came in at ten or eley n or twelve and found all still, and swear that no noise, confusion, cry or smell of burning cloth came to their notice that night, after the came in. All this was a part of a well consumated plan, but one that is destined, I believe, to an early and complete expoours. When the sense of justice is relieved -the people seem to breathe more freelypublic security and confidence is revived .--Men feel that the may not be hewn down in cold blood in the heart of this great city, at their own fire sides, and the murderer not only go unhung, but reap a golden harvest, in defiance of law, from the work of blood and death. Such I understand to be the nature of some of the developments about to transpire.

THE SILENCE OF AN ARTIC NIGHT. The following eloquent description of the silence of an Artic night occurs in Dr. Hays' lecture on the Artic Regions. We have at least upon one occasion, when eight or nine miles and r ground in the Mammoth Cave, seemed to fiel the darkness, but we never imagined that other negative attribute of nature eleace could be so intense as to be heard .-

Yet the Doctor's description makes this strange parodox a reality. He says:
"The moonlights of this period (winter) are the most grand and impressive of anything I have ever witnessed. The clearness of the air, the white surfac of the snow and ice give an effect monotonous and cheerless but truly grand. But there is a new element which makes this mid-winter moon-light seem al most terrible in its impressiveness-it is si-

"I have often, to escape from the trying monotony of ship board life, gone off six or eight miles into the interior in search of novelty, and in o der that I might be alone .-There seated upon a rock or snow-bank, I look around me and see a great uneven conntry, rocky hills and glaciers covered with enow myriads of crystal gems sparkling in the light of the pale moom, which shoots its rays down through the crisp air, making it almost as light as day. I look seaward, and were a h L: plain of, ice, melting into the horizon, dotted all over with huge towering bergs -acthing more.

"All nature is in the repose of death. I am too far from shore to hear the crounching of the cables as they rise and fall luzily with the tide, or the roar, like distant thunder, as some nuge crack opens through the heavy floes. There is no animal to cross my path no tree among whose stiff branches the wind can sigh and moan. There is no song of bird to entiren the scene, no wild beast to how!.-I stand there alone, the only representative of God's living world-the only being that has life or can move. Every sound that I hear, every motion that I see, is made by myself. I hear nothing but the pulsations of my own heart, my own footsteps, of now and then possibly, in the distance, the deep rumbling of a falling snowbank. The sentation of atter lonelines and isolation creeps over me. My heart beats as it rushes the blood through the sentitive organization of the ear I am oppressed as with discordant sounds Silence has censed to be negative; it has become sternly positive. I hear, see and feel it. its presence is unendurable, I spring to my feet; I print them heavily in the snow to drown its presence, and I rush back to the vessel, glad even to find refuge in its dull, dull

The Metropolis received a severe shock, but was not seriously injured. On the propeller were, as nearly as can be ascertained, fourteen passengers and a crew of eleven persons. Of these, twelve in all, were saved, including the captain, first and second engineers, two deck hands, and seven passengers.

An Appering Scene.—While Captain Smith was giving his statement, an old gentleman walked into the cabin of the Metropolis, and approached with an agitated manner. "How do you do, Mr. Gordon?" said the captain, extending his hand, and at the same time averting his face. The old gentleman took the proferred hand, and said in a tremulous voice: "I came to ask about my

The cause of the collision was a misunder tanding as to the proper way of passing. The officers of both boats manifested much cour tesy and forbearance in the subsequent discussions on the subject.

MURDER FROM JEALOUSY. Woman-Murder of the Nephew by the

A very deliberate and apparently premeditated murder was committed yesterday after-noon in the neighborhood of Fourth and Charry streets. The murdered man was young Englishman, named William L. Smith, and the perpetrator of the act was his uncle, George Freeth, who, meeting his nephew in he street, attempted to shoot him, but the pistol being knocked from his hand, the desperate man pursued his nephew into a tavern, the Washington Hotel, No. 232 Cherry street, kept by Joseph Wrigley, and before he could be prevented, fired three shots from a revolver into the body of the nephew.

He came to this country about 11 years since with his wife, and commenced work as a jew eler. After becoming settled, he returned to England, and on his return brought his nephew, Smith, also a jeweler, with him. Soon after the arrival of Smith, a difficulty occurred between Freeth and his wife, in consequence of its being insinuated that Freeth had ano of Freeth's hand. Smith then ran down Cherry street, and Freeth picked up his pfstol and ran after him. When Smith reached the Washington Hotel, he ran in, followed by Freeth. Both of them ran through the bar-room, a small, low ceiling room, towards a back room; just as Smith got into a small vestibule between the bar and kitchen, Freeth fired three times, two balls entering Smith's breast, killing him

Ine report of the pistol brought the land-lord down stairs, and on reaching the scene, found Smith partially doubled up on the floor, with his head in a position indicating that he designed running up stairs. Freeth was standing near by, and he at once said to the landlord, "I have done what I wanted to do, and you may send for an officer to arrest Word was sent to the Sixth Ward Station House. Sergeant Shuman went to the place and took Freeth in charge. The prisoner made the same statement to the officer that he had made to the landlord ; but before and after getting to the station house, he became somewhat difficult to manage.

that the deceased had threatened to take the former's life several times.

Smith and his wife moved into Fourth street, between Coates and Brown, and yesterday Smith started down town to attend to some business. When at Fourth and Cherry streets, he stopped to talk to a friend, named Henry Harrison, and, while thus engaged. Freeth passed up Fourth street in an omni-

Freeth made some reply to this, and said. "did I not pay your passage to this country?"
Smith denied this. Freeth then replied, "I will show you," at the same time pulling from a side pocket a paper and a six barrelled revolver. Freeth pointed the pistol and said, "Smith, you are a dead man;" but before he could pull the trigger, Mr. Harrison, who was talking with Smith, knocked the pistol out in about two minutes.

The report of the pistol brought the land-
