Farmer's Department.

Profits of the Chinese Sugar Cane The senior publisher of this paper has cultivated, during the present year, one eighth of an acre of ground in Chinese cane. It was planted in drills, in the same manner you would plant a crop of core through which you desired to plow only one way There was no extra attention gives either to the cultivation, bandling or saving of the crop. The fodder was first taken, and afterwards the seed. The cane was then cut and crushed by means of an imperfect wooden mill, and the juice manufactured into molesses in about the same manner you would make molasses from our common sugar tree, boili g and skimming it until it attained a proper thickness and color. It makes a very desirable article of molasses, and superior, in some respects, to the article we now purchase at New Orleans. We have a sample on hand, which we would be pleased to show to all such persons as may take an interest in the cultivation of the Chinese cane. The result of our observation of what has passed under our own eye, during the current year, enables us to say that the yield of one year of this cane, properly cultivated in drills, would be about as follows:

Yield of One Acre of Chinese Cane. 150 gallons of molasses, average price, (for five years,) 35 cents, -100 bushels of seed, -Fodder from the same. . 10,00

Expenses.

For cultivation, plowing, seeding, gathering, grinding cane and barrels for molasses, -$32,50

Profit of one acre after deducting everything in shape of charges

$55.00 ngainst crop, - - -In the above calculation we have made a large estimate for expenses; larger, we believe, than would necessarily occur. For instance, we charge ten dollars for getting out the seed, whereas a farmer would feed it in the same way he would feed his clover. This item should, then, of course, be deducted as a charge, less the expense of cutting. We are fully impressed that the cultivation of the Chinese cane is a subject that interests our farmers greatly, and that they should take hold of the subject and investigate the whole matter fully for themselves | Doubtless in building Respers, and using them in the harthe Patent Office at Washington city will make a full report on the subject during the that long period.
