The great popularity of our article has been found sufficient inducement to certain imitators to manufacture and advertise "Raw Bone Phosphates," a name which originated with us, and is our own rightful property. We will state for the information of all, that we are the exclusive manufacturers of this article—the original and sole proprietors of it—having been manufactured by us for a period of twelve years. Also that it is covered by several letters patent, held only by ourselves.

We are now ready to supply it in large quantities—having made tweent additions and improvements. her eyes in amazement.
"I thought you understood it. Your estates join, and it is eminently proper, therefore, that you should unite them by mar-that kind, to support myself, and I have such an appetite!"

Mr. Parker smiled in spite of himself, and evidently looked upon his nicce as one who would readily yield to his expressed will.
"One question more, uncle. Suppose he should not fancy your humble niece, and be your fault."

"It would be mortifying to have him reject me," said Matilda, demurely. "Is there anything he particularly dislikes in a wo-reflection. "All sorts of strong minded women are his aversion. But then you know, Mattie, you are not strong-minded." "Thank you, uncle, very much. That is as much as to say I am weak-minded." "No such thing, you gypsey. But there's one thing more I have to tell you, and that is, that I am called away to New-York by business, which will detain me the full length of his stay. So you will have to en-tertain him yourself. Mind and play your cards well, and I shall expect to find the member me to him when he arrives, and tell him how much I regret not being here to welcome him."

That night Matilda kept awake for some time, concocting a plan which might offend the prejudices of the expected visitor, and throw the burden of a refusal upon him.—
For she well knew that if he once proposed, her uncle would be seriously angry if she rejected him, and very possibly would carry out the threat to which he had given utter-

It was about twelve o'clock the next day, that a tall young man, of serious aspect, ascended Mr. Parker's front steps, and rang the bell. He was ushered into the drawingroom, where, after waiting half an hour, he was joined by Matilda.

The young lady was by no means looking her best. Her hair was loosely arranged, her collar was awry, and there was a very perceptible stain of ink upon her finger.

"Mr. Jenkins, I presume," she remarked.

The gentleman bowed and looked curiously at his artistication.

"I'm inclined to think he will before he goes," thought Matilda.

Looking at her fingers, she remarked composedly, as if she, for the first time, observed the stain of ink, "I hope you will excuse the appearance of my fingers," but I have been writing all the morning, and I could'nt remove all traces of the ink." "You were writing letters, I presume?"

said Stephen.
"O, no! not at all; I was writing an arti-cle on "Woman's Rights," for the Bugle of Freedom.'

Matilda interrupted herself to ring the "Jane," said she to the servant, "you may

"If you like, Mr. Jenkins, I will read you what I have written."
Mr. Jenkins looked dismayed, but managed to niter a feeble—"O, certainly."
Yatilds, in an emphatic manner, began to read as follows:

agree with me.' "Do you really think, Miss Parker, that there should be no distinction in point of occupation between men and women?" exclaimed the sedate Stephen, horror-struck.
"Why should there be?" said Matilda, with spirit. "Do you doubt whether wo-man has intellect equal to that of a man?" "Is there a female Shakspeare?" asked

"Yes," said Matilda, promptly. you never read Mrs. Browning's poems?"
"I can't say I have," returned Stephen.
"Ah, then I shall have the pleasure of making you acquainted with her."

She rang the bell. "Jane," said she "go up to my room and bring down the book you will find on the table.

Jane did so.
"We have an hour before dinner it seems," said Matilda, looking at her watch,-"in what way can we better improve it, than by perusing together this noble monument of

Mr. Jenkins looked terrified; but before he had time to raise any objection, Matilda had commenced. She read aloud faithfully for the hour referred-it seemed three hours to the un-happy Stephen-who had not the slightest apprehension of poetry and description.

He was quite delighted when the dinner bell rang, and so was Matilda in her secret heart. "I am afraid," said she, "we shall have to

"How many pages are there in the poem?" the young man inquired hesitatingly.
"Only a little more than four hundred,"

was the encouraging reply.

The dinner proved to be not a very social meal. Matilda confined herself entirely to attempts at negotiation for that time failed. literary subjects, and evaded all attempts to change the topic.
"Good Gracious!" thought the young

"Gone! When did he go?"

"He only stopped a couple of days."
"Why, he was to have stopped a week.

"Here is a note, uncle!" Mr. Parker hastily broke open the misive, and read as follows :

leading operator in the recent gigantic rob-bery of bonds from Mr. Lord's office in Wall st., which created such a stir at its occurrence, has been taken into custody. He was arrested by City Marshal Westcott, of Newburyport and two of United States Marshal Murray's detectives of this city. The manner in which the shrewd thieves brought their plans of robbery to a temporary success was somewhat as follows: It was first ascertained that Mr. Lord kept in his safe an unusual large number of available securities, that he was rather careless in locking them up at night, that he seldom looked at the boxes containing them, and that a certain number of days, two or three at least, might clapse after the robbery be-fore they would be missed. Several plans were concected and abandoned, each one Boston was the city chosen, and March 22d the day named for the gathering of the precious assemblage. It is stated that some negotiations were already pending when the Marshal's officers arrested one of the parties.

City Marshal Westcott of Newburyport,

Mass., received information relative to the whereabouts of Brown that led him to suspect that that person was in some way mixed up in the great bond robbery. As he wanted Brown upon another charge he thought it would do no harm to look after him. He accordingly started for New York, gathering information as he went, and ascertaining that Brown was in this city, and was then contemplating to go to Boston, he applied to United States Marshal Murray, of this city, for assistance. The officers detailed for this business met their man at the New-Haven depot on Monday night week, satchel in hand, and followed him over to satchel in hand, and followed him over to Boston. The arrest was made on the cars, but as Marshal Westcott could hold the prisoner on a charge at Newburyport, he was taken there at ouce. He appears perfectly indifferent as to his fate, having given forth his ultima tum and waiting to hear the result.

The case is certainly a curious one, and will probably become more deeply interesting before it reaches a conclusion.- N. Y. Tribune.

SLEEP.

For the real cause of sleep, learned physicians and wise philosophers have been unable to account. When night, with its silence and darkness, comes on, the wearied mind and muscles voluntarily exclude the operation of the senses-the fibres of the rain collapse to throw off a superabundance of blood, and we sink into repose, more or less refreshing, depending on other influences, to which we are subjected in sleep.

The senses locked in healthful slumber the mind hears nothing, sees nothing, and the brain and whole system are refreshed thereby. The mind and the muscles are at rest; but the heart continues to proper the blood through the system—digestion, insensible perspiration, and respiration, con-tinue, and the senses awaken to renewed invigoration and activity. Butdo all ex-perience this vigor from sleep? No; for re-freshing sleep depends upon many influ-

As respiration continues in a sleeping as well as a wakeful state, we must have pure air to breathe by night to render sleep in-vigorating. This many forget, and shut themselves in a close apartment, without any mode of ventilation. Their rooms, many times are not aired through the day, There is now little or no doubt that the are filled with the smoke of a pipe or cigar. Sleep, in such poisonous air, is disturbed and restless, the breathing hurried, oppres-sive, and lauguid; the heart flutters; the mind and brain disturbed and dull; the mouth, throat, tongue, lips, and stomach experience a disgreeable sensation, the in-dividual not thinking all this while what was the cause. Every effect has a cause, and this cause needs to be removed to remove the effect.

Healthful respiration, either in a sleeping or wakeful state, comnot long be performed by any breathing animal without pure air. For this was man and all breathing animals furnished with lungs and air cells. At every respiration air is inspired and respired. The inspired air should contain its natural quantity of oxygen, to purify the blood as it circulates through the lungs. constantly admitting outdoor air are filled with respired air, or air that has been rejected by the lungs as unfit to nourish the system.
