Gen. Harriman has just been elected Governor of New Hampshire, by a Republican majority of 3,000. Three Republican members of Congress were elected. The Republican majori ty, in the lower House, is seventy-five.

Delivered in the House of Representatives, March 7, on the subject of the Impeachment of the President.

tion. I think we ought not at this time to allege that any evidence that we have is sufficient to impeach the President. It is time enough to decide that question after the Committee on the Judiciary shall have given the subject a fair and impartial investigation. We ought to consider the matter that the subject and a large body of the subject a fair and impartial investigation. We ought to consider the matter that the subject and a large body of the latter was killed and five were wounded.

The police capcured eighty prisoners and coolly and deliberately, and ought not to prejudge the case. The Committee on the Judiciary are to be appointed by the honor-able Speaker of this House. I am satisfied he will select men of legal ability, and gen-demen who will give the subject careful and thorough consideration. It is proper that the matter should first be considered by men of eminent legal ability and report-ed upon to the House. If the evidence is sufficient to put the President of the United States upon his trial, let him have a fair and impartial hearing. He should not be screened because he holds the highest of-fice in the nation, but should be treated like any other citizen of this Government, how-

But, sir, I am opposed to prejudging this or any other case. I am not in favor of pronouncing upon this floor that he is guilty before we have an investigation and the evi-dence laid before the House. If when the committee in charge have given the subject a fair and full investigation they shall find that he has been guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors, I for one would be ready to say, impeach him, and remove him from the presidential chair with as little delay as practicable, and not prolong the trial in imiation to the great Hastings case before Parliament. But until that committee shall report, it is improper for us to pass on his guilt or innocence.

I admit that the great Republican party which promoted Andrew Johnson to his present high position have been badly treated. We elected him to that position, and he has turned his back against us and has joined hand in hand with those who opposed the war to put down the rebellion and this in a great measure, I have the charity to believe, was owing to bad advisers, of which any man will get plenty when he deserts his friends and partakes of the forbidden fruit. But with all that we, as the representatives of the people, must try him as we would try any other man. Give him an impartial trial; wait for the evidence and report of your committee, and then, if evidence sustains the charges as to his guilt, do not hesitate to impeach him; and, on the other hand, if insufficient, dismiss the subject, and let the country understand that he escapes for want of proper evidence. But, I repeat, until the com-mittee shall report let us forbear making any allegations as to his guilt or innocence.

But as the people of the country seem to demand investigation it is the duty of this Congress to proceed with as little delay as possible, and let there be no shrinking from duty, investigate it thoroughly, and if neces sary probe it to the core. Now, sir, it has been said that our action here upon this question may effect the financial condition of the country. We are told that if we impeach the President the Government securities will depreciate in the market, and that it will bring upon us bankruptcy. I have no such fears, and Congress ought not to be intimidated by any suggestions of the kind. But even if it would have that effect, it is no reason for shrinking from duty. Let us go on and investigate this matter fairly, and if the evidence bears out the charges made against the President, or such of them as in our opinion can justify his removal from office. let us prepare articles of impeachment and put him upon his trial, and if, on the contrary, after a full investigation by the Judigained a world-wide reputation and ciary Committee the evidence is found indsome fortune, died in Southampton, sufficient, then, as I have already said, dismiss the subject, and bear with bim as well as we can, until the expiration of his term, when we can select a man that will not turn against those who place him in power. There is no denying, Mr. Speaker, that it is gailing to have a man promoted to a high position turn his back against those to whom he is indebted for elevation, and use the mighty patronage he wields against them. Such a course will be condemned by not sufficient to sustain an impeachment. Had Andrew Johnson been true to his friends he had an opportunity of making himself popular, and been an honor to him self and his country. After the assassina tion of the much lamented Lincoln, the mantle of that great and good man, at whose death the nation still mourns, was thrown on the shoulders of Mr. Johnson; but, alas! in an evil hour he was induced to partake of the forbidden fruit in the form of modern Democracy, which seemed pleasant for him to look upon, hence his great fall. His course will be a warning to all those in future that may occupy the presidential chair not to forsake the party that elected him. And now, Mr, Speaker, as the time allotted e from the direction of the Speaker's to me has expired, permit me to say in conte apartments, seated in a library chair, clusion that I for one will shrink from no duty; that I am willing to enter upon this
