How Conductors are Ruined. A repentant railroad detective, who has now embarked in a more respectable calling, makes the following interesting exposure of the manner in which innocent railroad men are ruined.

the door. Looking up I saw a lady enter. She was dressed just as I had last seen my widow. I had just to offer her a seat, thinking it was some one of the family, when I caught the expression of her face. It was light and death like; but the features were those of my widow. I was spell bound with astonishment. She walked to the mantle, and resting one arm on it, regarded me with a look that said, 'I am your mother.'
