and passed on. It was afternoon. The child was some what fragile in her appearance. Her bonnet of broken straw ; her shoes much torn; the sun played hotly on her tender fore-head. She walked on one hour. 'Is this the way to Sing Sing ?'

'Yes, little girl ; but what are you going there for ?' The child turned on, her lips quivering, but not deigning to answer the pleasant faced old man who had stopped the jogging of his horse to note the hurried man ner. and who liked that little face, anxious and sad as its expression was. The dew was hilling. Katy had fallen too, almost. A rough stone by the way, imbedded in moss, received her tired little frame. She looked wearied and aged sitting there, here, her tangled hair falling on her hands that were clasped over her face. By the shaking of her frame, the tears were coming too, and she was bravely trying to hold them back. "Why ! what is this dear little girl dong here ? The exclamation came from a pair of cager young lips. 'A curiosity ! I dechare !' exclaimed a harsh voice, and Katy, looking up sudden-ly, cowered away from the sight of the pretty young girl, and her agreeable young looking companion. 'What are you doing here, little girl?' asked Nell Maywood, moving a little nearer to the frightened child. 'Going to Sing Sing,' said Katy in a strange way. 'Did you ever, George ; this child is going to Sing Sing ; why, it's ten miles off. Little child did you know it was so far off ?' Katy shook her head, and wiped away the heavy tears one by one.

'Why yes, you poor little goose. What are going to Sing Sing for ?' 'Have you had your supper ?'

Katy shook her head. 'Have you had you dinner ?'

Again the child shook her head. 'Nor breakfast ? Why, George, the poor little thing must be starved !'

'I should think so,' mechanically replied her brother, just recovering from a yawn, and showing signs of sympathy. 'Look here ; what's your name ?' 'Katy.'

'Well, Katy, you must come up to the house and get something to cat. Going to Sing Sing on foot, dear me, how rediculous! Follow me, Katy, and we'll take care of you to-night, somehow, and see about going to Sing Sing to-morrow morning. Katy followed. What a glorious vision burst upon her view ! The palace house, the rocks reddenning in the low western sun ; the shining river ; the signs of luxury on every hand.

They walked up the wide avenue. Elms and oaks threw their pleasant branches oneach side ; here and there a flower bush to a stand still. The Jailor rapped at the might be seen ; vines grew around the no- cell door. Slowly the figure of a man with pillars, twisting up to the glittering a harsh, hair covered face, appeared. window.

may be she's just the one.

So Katy stood trembling more than ever, for a few moments, in the presence of the Warden and Jailor. Katy was a pretty child. Her large blue eyes wore an ex-pression of intense melancholy; her hair had been so nicely curled and combed, and some one had put a good pair of shoes on her feet. 'Well, my little girl,' said the Warden kindly, for he was prepossessed in her favor, 'where have you come from ?' 'New York,' said the child faintly.

The men looked at each other increduously.

'Do you mean to say that you have come to Sing Sing, from New York, on foot. 'Yes, sir,' said the child, frightened at his manner, which had in it something of sat there, his head in the lap of his beautiseverity 'And what have you come for ?'

'To see my father,' the child burst forth with one great sob, and for a moment her frame was shaken with a tempest of feeling. 'And who is father ?' asked the Warden kindly.

'He is Mr. Lloyd,' said the child as soon as she could speak for the rushing sobs.

'Lloyd ; there are three Lloyds here-Jim, Bondy and Dick,' said the Jailor. 'They may not be their proper names.'

responded the Warden. 'That's so,' said the Jailor; but I can try them all. Little one, was your father's name Jim ?

mination of her journey. 'If it is Jim, he's a bad one,' said the Jailor in a low tone; 'he's in irons this morning for attempting to break jail; he don't deserve a little gal as looks like that one, the villian. Come, I'll go and find your father." He took Katy's hand ; with the other she dashed the tears away as fast as they fell. It frightened her almost into calm-living hearts, whose throb could almost be heard in the awful stillness. On, on they went through the passage way. Every thing spoke of crime, of tierce passion subdued and held in control ; from the grim face of the ferocious watch dog, to the sentinels all armed.

with us a complete success. Instead of aiming to drive away the insect by soot, ashes, &c., we pet it, or rather furnish it with food better than the young melon and cucumber plants. We sow around each hill at the time of each planting a few
