BALTIMORE LOCK HOSPITAL.

DR. JOHNSON, Physician of this celebrated Institution, has discovered the most certain, speedy, pleasant and effectual remedy in the world for all DISEASES OF IMPURITUDE.

Weakness of Strictures, Affections of Kidneys and Bladder, Involuntary Discharges, Impotency, General Debility, Nervousness, Dyspepsia, Swallowing, Low Spirits, Confusion of the Mind, Palpitation of the Heart, Trembling, Dimness of Sight or Giddiness, Disease of the Head, Throat, Nose, Skin, Affections of Lungs, Stomach, or Bowels—these terrible Disorders arising from the Solitary Habits of Youth—those secret and solitary practices more fatal to their victims than the severest Symples to the Marines of Ulysses, blighting their most brilliant hopes of anticipations, rendering marriage, &c., impossible.

Young Men especially, who have become victims of Solitary Vice, that dreadful and destructive habit which annually sweeps to an untimely grave thousands of young men, the most exalted talents and brilliant intellects, who might otherwise have entered listening Senates with the thunders of eloquence or walked to ecstasy the living lyre, may call for confidence.

MARRIAGE. Married Persons or Young Men contemplating marriage, aware of Physical Weakness, (Loss of Procreative Power,) or of any other defect of Fertility, Palpitation, Organic Weakness, Nervous Debility, or any other Disqualification, speedily relieved.

Just twenty years ago I began my business career in this place—half my lifetime thus far spent, have I stood upon the floor of our shop—day after day, and night after night, and applied the sharp blue gleaming steel, and with the elapse of time embraced by the mighty folds of that eventful period have I shaved nearly every body in the country (in common parlance) and to oblige the public interest we herein publicly announce to our patrons old and new that we are ready to shave them all again three hundred thousand times or more.

Immerse—We are always ready to work, forenoon or afternoon, to shave you, hair cut, you, shampoo you, whisker dye, or perfume, comb and arrange the hair with artistic skill. In the "water fall" or water raise style to suit the customer. We work to please, not to please to work.

Stop, don't go past our shop, or shaved on the basis of ability—because we do it as well as it can be done or ever could be.

A chance is all that we demand to give the public the best of our hair.

Don't Read This!! Good morning, Mrs. A., where are you bound for so early?

Mrs. A.—Why Mrs. C., don't you know Mr. B. has bought out the Grocery and Confectionery Store of Haas & Co., and is selling nice Fresh Groceries, Canned Fruit, and in fact, everything in the Grocery line, cheaper than the cheapest, and have got tired paying high prices. So I have made up my mind after this to patronize Mr. B. My dear, so good morning, Mrs. C. I must go.

Mrs. C., to herself.—Well I am bound to find out for myself, and will go to B. My new cheap grocery, the next time I want any Groceries, Confectioneries or Prime Oysters.

I will just say to all come and give me a trial, and satisfy yourselves that there is one cheap cash Grocery in Sunbury. Remember the place, No. 11, South Third St., in Clement House Building, Sunbury, Pa. S. BYERLY, Sunbury, Jan. 22, 1872.

THE JUDGE'S STORY. "Young man!" said the late eminent Judge M., at a fashionable party where wine flowed in abundance; "young man, put down that glass! There is death in it!"

Henry Graham dropped the cut-glass goblet upon the table, startled by the abrupt exclamation of the judge, and the wine flowed in a ruby stream over the carpet.

"Sir, what mean you?" he asked, his face flushed, and his eyes brilliant with excitement.

"I mean," said the judge, impressively, "to discountenance always, in every place, at every time and in every available manner, the use of intoxicating drinks. My young friend, you are about to place your lips an infernal poison! You were doing it gayly, thoughtlessly, recklessly. Would you dare, if you stood within the gate of death's domain, in the face of God and the angels, would you dare to quaff the draught which but a few moments ago you drank, and which you now would remember the Divine edict that no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of Heaven, would you run the risk of falling under the terrible ban?"

The young man grew pale; he shrank a little before the penetrating gaze of his instructor, and his voice was slightly unsteady as he said:

"I do not think I quite understand you, sir."

"Sit down, my friends," said the judge, for the gay company had been smitten to stillness by the unusual earnestness with which he had spoken, and many a man and woman, who had been laughing and joking, now sat in silence, and listened to the words of the subject which will, perhaps, have double interest when I tell you that the incidents are strictly true. And to you, Henry Graham, as one in whom I feel a deep degree of interest, I wish particularly to address myself."

Young Graham sat near the judge and gave him his attention.

"Thirty-five years ago," said the judge, "there resided in the township of Milan a happy family. It consisted of a father, a mother and three children—two boys and a girl. The father, whom I will call John Deane, was a man of high talents and of brilliant intellect and solid education. His wife was a beautiful woman, richly gifted by nature, and she had received all the cultivation that wealth can give to his daughters. I said they were a happy family. I think I have never known a happier. They were a day with contented wings by their hearthstones, and their content had there a constant bidding place.

"John Deane stood very high in the opinion of his townsmen, as well as with the people of the whole district, and his name was mentioned in connection with the name of a modern author, that no man never prospered in the world without the co-operation of his wife. If she unites in her endeavors, or rewards his labor with an encouraging smile, with what confidence he will resort to his merchandise or his farm, or his lands, sail upon the seas, meet difficulties, and encounter danger, if he knows he is not spending his strength in vain, but that his labor will be rewarded by the sweets at home. Solitude and disquietude, after judgment passed for the sake of a new string to her lute, as she read this evidence of man's barbarism and inhumanity to woman.

CO-OPERATION OF THE WIFE.—It is much good sense and truth in the remarks of a modern author, that no man never prospered in the world without the co-operation of his wife. If she unites in her endeavors, or rewards his labor with an encouraging smile, with what confidence he will resort to his merchandise or his farm, or his lands, sail upon the seas, meet difficulties, and encounter danger, if he knows he is not spending his strength in vain, but that his labor will be rewarded by the sweets at home. Solitude and disquietude, after judgment passed for the sake of a new string to her lute, as she read this evidence of man's barbarism and inhumanity to woman.

"One day, in a fit of drunken fury, John Deane struck his wife a blow upon the head with a fragment of a chair which had previously fallen a sacrifice to his rage. She fell to the floor, and the man was sobered in an instant by the sight. She lay at his feet, still and white, beautiful in spite of the ravages her sin had made, the blood gushing in a dark stream from her temples, and clotting the long dark hair which fell in a neglected mass over her shoulders.

"She was dead! Murdered by her own husband!"

"Stung by remorse and fear, as he was the cold pallor of death settling over her features, John Deane placed the muzzle of a pistol to his breast and in a moment lay dead upon the floor. There was no struggle of the forces of life and death—a faint call for mercy, and he had gone to his account!"

"And Arthur Deane, over the bodies of his parents, took a solemn oath—never, so long as the spark of life burned in his breast, to rest until he had avenged the blood of his father and mother, and the struggle of the forces of life and death—a faint call for mercy, and he had gone to his account!"

"There was a pause, during which no one spoke, and the face of young Graham alternately paled and flushed. Helen M., the judge's fair daughter, watched him in breathless suspense, for in two weeks she was to become Henry Graham's wife.

"It is enough," he said solemnly, the light of his eyes sinking into his cheeks, "henceforth I will send everything that can intoxicate, and may God deal with me as I keep the vow!"

Wine never entered the home of Henry Graham, and water—pure, beautiful water, from the sweet fountain of the earth, was his daily drink.

The sweet face of Helen Graham never had cause to blush for the conduct of her husband, and when in after years the people made him Governor of his native State, and his house was the stronghold of hospitality, wine was never seen upon his table, and he never saw any guests who were not drunk that God himself provided free on every hillside—clear, cold water.

thrown into convulsions, from which nothing could save her, and before morning she was taken to the world where all children have the constant care of a wise Father.

"The two boys, Arthur and William, for awhile stood aloof from this scene of their parent's life; but at last the younger, William, fell into the habit of tasting the contents of the glass, 'out of curiosity,' he said, when remonstrated with by his brother. But once started on the fatal road there was no halting. He went down rapidly. After a ten month's career at a gambling table, he was shot by a comrade in a drunken brawl. To the degraded faculties of the father and mother, this terrible occurrence was not an affliction—they scarce looked upon it as anything for which they should grieve, and when they stood together over the silent coffin of that dead boy, the cup was there to comfort them, and they drank and recovered what has been, not inaptly, termed 'the drink of hell,' for the comfort which only comes from God.

"Their handsome property was long since squandered—the beautiful house and furniture passed under the hammer of the auctioneer, and they were reduced to the drunken couple and their wretched son.

"Oh, the scenes of horror which the eyes of that son were forced to witness! A father—his noble manhood prostituted to a vile appetite, his intellect ruined, soul wandering in indelicacy—slashed by respectability, and his mother, who had been those as low as himself. A mother—her gentle love turned to stolid indifference—her whole life but a series of petty bickerings with the man whom she had sworn to love and honor. Her child was no longer regarded with that holiest of all human affections, a mother's love, and which she could have sought the grateful sympathy in his pursuits which all true mothers are so happy in giving, he was met by drunken jeers and sent to the ale-house for rum. Worse than orphaned! The child of shame and contempt! Pointed at by boys of his own age, and purged by his own girls, and he was a drunkard's child! Judge what joy in life there was for him!

"Conservative minds may cry out against the use of strong language in speaking of this demon Intemperance, which yearly lays in its grave its thousands; but think you the child whose mother's name would call up my expressions too strong? Language is weak and inadequate to convey to you any idea of the loathing and hatred which Arthur Deane felt in his heart for intoxicating drink. Would that every man, woman and child throughout the length and breadth of this land, fell the same fate.

"But to return. Five years passed away, during which poverty in all its grim guises was established in the house of John Deane. Starvation more than once passed before the door and went as an every day remark. Domestic strife began at sunrise, and ended in a quarrel going out of day. Oh! that time is full of bitter memories for Arthur Deane. But I am making a long story, and must go to the close.

"One day, in a fit of drunken fury, John Deane struck his wife a blow upon the head with a fragment of a chair which had previously fallen a sacrifice to his rage. She fell to the floor, and the man was sobered in an instant by the sight. She lay at his feet, still and white, beautiful in spite of the ravages her sin had made, the blood gushing in a dark stream from her temples, and clotting the long dark hair which fell in a neglected mass over her shoulders.

HOW COFFEE WAS DISCOVERED.—Toward the middle of the 15th century a poor Arab was travelling in Abyssinia, and finding himself weak and weary from fatigue he stopped near a grove. Being in want of fuel to cook his rice, he cut down a tree which happened to be covered with dried berries. His meal being cooked and eaten, the traveller discovered that these half-burned
