BALTIMORE LOCK HOSPITAL. DR. JOHNSTON.

Physician of this celebrated Institution, has discovered a remedy for the treatment of the following

DISORDERS OF IMPRUDENCE. Weakness of the Back or Limbs, Strictures, Affections of Kidneys and Bladder, Involuntary Discharges of Semen, &c., &c.

Head, Throat, Nose or Skin, Affections of Liver, Lungs, Stomach or Bowels—these terrible Disorders arising from the Solitary Habits of Youth—those secret and solitary practices more fatal to their victims than the song of Sirens to the Mariners of Ulysses, blighting their most brilliant hopes of anticipation, rendering marriage, &c., impossible.

YOUNG MEN especially, who have become the victims of Solitary Vice, that dreadful and destructive habit, will annually sweep away untidily generations of young men of the most exalted talents and brilliant intellect, who might otherwise have entered listening Senators with the heads of eagles.

MARRIAGE. Married Persons or Young Men contemplating marriage, aware of their own excessive Procreative Power—Impotence, Nervous Excitability, Palpitation, Organic Weakness, Nervous Debility, or any other Disaffection, speedy relief.

He who places himself under the care of Dr. J. Johnston, may rely with confidence on his skill as a Physician.

ORGANIC WEAKNESS. Impotence, Loss of Power, immediately Cured and full Vigor Restored.

This Distressing Affection—which renders Life miserable and marriage impossible—is the penalty paid by the victims of improper indulgence. Young persons are too apt to consume excesses from not being aware of the dreadful consequences that may ensue.

Select Poetry. NOVEMBER.

The red sun gathers up his beams To the westward, and the twilight falls, And voices from the swelling streams, Are ringing with the evening bell;

And voices from the swelling streams, Are ringing with the evening bell; The cold lake throbs with restless grief, And the water ripples grow;

While autumn fowl, and autumn leaf, Are sailing down the river tide.

FORSAKEN are the woodland shrines, The birds to warmer lands have fled, And voices from the swelling streams, Are ringing with the evening bell;

Rattlesnake Bites, and How they are cured in Texas.

In Texas, on the borders more especially, rattlesnakes, king-snakes, black-snakes, tarantulas, centipedes, and a great many other kinds of venomous reptiles abound, and it is not an infrequent occurrence that some of the soldiers there stationed get badly bitten by them.

The greatest number of bites are, however, given by the most dreaded of all, the rattlesnake. A number of instances had occurred in which their venom had been contracted.

A couple of instances will suffice: A soldier attached to a detachment who was escorting a train from San Antonio to Fort Terrell, espied a rabbit a short distance off, and fired at and wounded him. The animal ran to a hole, and the soldier pursued him, reaching the hole at nearly the same time as the rabbit.

He thrust his hand down the hole to draw him out, and immediately felt a severe bite on the ball of his thumb. He drew out his hand and could plainly perceive that it had been bitten by a snake; his thumb was pierced in two places, and the blood was dripping very freely from the incisions made by the fangs.

The soldier did not experience any pain from it, not did any swelling even ensue, and he returned to his quarters, although the snake was a large one, with eight rattles. Now, if the gall of a rattlesnake is a cure for its bite, why could the same remedy be applied to the bite of other reptiles? The second instance was that of a soldier who had shot a deer near the base of the mountain and was about to take possession of the carcass, when he accidentally trod upon a rattlesnake, which immediately fastened its fangs into the calf of his leg, and made off unharmed.

The soldier immediately thought of the remedy, and turning down his stocking, he drew out the fang, and immediately bandaging it up tightly, walked to camp under a hot sun, a distance of two miles not suffering from the venom in the least, and never died. The latter is truly a simple remedy.

Andrew Jackson's Duel with Chas. Dickinson. We find in an exchange the following account of a duel fought by Gen. Jackson with Charles Dickinson. It took place May 30, 1845, at Hartsville, Miss., on Hed River, in Logan county, Kentucky.

The place of combat was a long day's ride from Nashville, and the duellists were consequently obliged to start twenty-four hours previous. Dickinson, beside his second, was accompanied on the fatal journey by a number of gay companions, who went on ahead for a considerable distance. More or less difficulty is also experienced on account of tow-lines. But if it should be demonstrated that steam can be employed to advantage, these embarrassments will all disappear in a short time.

The steamer William Baxter started October 12 on her second down-trip. She has already made two westward voyages. On the last she brought up 113 tons of freight consuming five tons of coal. Her time from Troy to Buffalo was 110 hours, or less than five days. This is a great improvement on the first trip, and it is also a considerable saving in the average time made by horse-boats. One of the first downward voyages the Baxter had on board, and made the through trip to New York in nine days, consuming five tons of coal. In going down the Hudson River from Troy she beat the steam tow barges twelve hours on New York.

There is nothing really new about the Baxter's model or machinery. She is propelled by two common screw wheels in the stern, 4 1/2 feet in diameter with 4 feet pitch. She has plenty of power, being supplied with two engines 12 by 12 inches low pressure. Her boiler is of the Baxter's type, and is five feet high by four feet in diameter. But the bows are shaped somewhat differently from those of the common boats. The stem-post, instead of rounding off as it approaches the keel, goes straight down to the bottom of the boat. The object of this is to keep the vessel on an even keel, and make her steady when going fast or slow. A boat built after the ordinary model, when forced through the water at a high rate of speed, has a tendency to side on top of the water forward, being shaped in the lower part something like a sleigh-runner. But with the straight stem-post the bows are necessarily wedge-shaped, and it is claimed that in passing through the water the boat forces all the water to the right and left, instead of sending part of it underneath the bottom.

From this it will be seen that the State's prize is not the great consideration with him. He can devise a steam launch-boat that will make the round trip in about half the time now taken and at much less expense, as he expects to, he may be very well satisfied, as it will be a mine of wealth to any man.

THE OLDEST OLD-FELLOW.—It was stated some weeks ago that John G. Potts, of Galena, was the oldest Old-Fellow in the United States, having been initiated in 1825. This has brought out William Austice, of Philadelphia, who says he was initiated in 1822, in Washington Lodge, Baltimore, then a small village in the United States. While Mr. Austice was in the N. G. chair, in Baltimore, he says some Philadelphia friends applied for and obtained a charter to open a lodge in that city. Mr. Austice then removed to Philadelphia and joined the lodge there.

A FREE AGENT—One who goes off with his master's dash. Women are formed for attachment. Their love is an unceasing fountain of delight to the man who has once attained and knows how to deserve it.

A young lady was looking at a picture representing a pair of lovers in a boat, with the lover gently clasping the waist of his dulcinea when she innocently remarked, "How natural!"

Agricultural, &c. GATHER UP THE LEAVES.—Many are apt to consider the dying leaves of autumn as possessed of little or no substance. This, says a correspondent of the Country Gentleman, is erroneous; they contain not only vegetable matter, but potash, lime and earthy salts, which are all required for the growth of the crops for the next summer.

Nature enriches her soil, year after year, in the great unbroken forests, by the decomposition of these leaves, and it seems hardly possible that the rotting farmer or horticulturist can allow them to be swept away by every wind that blows, and finally lost altogether. If in orchards the leaves of each tree should be collected, and be placed under the soil about the roots, they would provide in the cheapest manner the best possible food for the soil. Pear, apple, peach and cherry trees would be greatly benefited by this simple process.

It is said that certain vineyards of France and Italy are kept in the highest condition by simply burying at their roots every leaf that falls from the trees, and that the vines at the falls of the autumn are more vigorously sought after by florists than lam-mould; it enters largely into the preparation of compost for potting house plants. They are most excellent absorbents for house-stalls, and when gathered perfectly dry, and kept until the spring, may be used to manure a dark brittle character, which improves it for any use, and makes it unsurpassed for top-dressing for garden purposes. A litter of leaves is also more manageable than the usual one of straw, as it can be renewed without the necessity of cleaning out the stall more than two or three times a week, as the leaves absorb the ammonia rapidly, and can be more readily incorporated with the manure, by being trodden and worked over in the stall, than if removed daily. They are especially recommended for hot-beds, making the dried leaves with the horse manure, and manure, to better ingredient for increasing the strength of worn-out gardens. It surely pays to gather the leaves and unload them in the mucky barn-yard or pig-sty, for the purpose of absorbing the liquid manure. It is more pay for small boys to rake up the pieces of rotting leaves, which are not as usual, and pile them up in the stable or barn yard, if they can be taught not to scatter more
