A DRINK IN THE DARK .- One New Year's night Chubb came home very late, * and when he went up stairs his wife and children were in bed asleep. His undressed as softly as he could, and then he felt thirsty; Fortunately he saw a gobletful standing on the washstand, placed there for him evidently by Mrs. Chubb. He seized it and drank the liquid in two or three huge gulps, but just as he was draining the goblet he gagged, dropped the gifts, to the floor, where it was shivered to atoms, while he ejected something from his month. He was certain that a live animal of some kind had been in the water, and that he had nearly swallowed it. This theory was confirmed when he saw the object which he spit out go bounding over the floor. He pursued it, kicking a couple of chairs over while doing so, and at last he put his foot on it and held it. Of course Mrs. Chubb was awake by this time and scared nearly to death, and the baby was screaming at the top of its lungs. Mrs. Chubb got out of bed and turned up the gas, and said : "Mr. Chubb, what in the name of common sense is the matter ?" "It's a mouse, Louisa !" shouted Chubb in an excited manner. "It's a mouse in the goblet. I nearly swallowed it, but I spit it out, and now I've got my foot on it. Get a stick and kill it quick !"

Mrs. Chubb was at first disposed to jump on a chair and scream ; for, like all women, she feared a mouse as much as she did a tiger. But at Chubb's solicitation she got a broom and prepared to demolish the mouse when Chubb lifted his foot. He drew back and aimed a fearful blow at the object and missed it. Then, as it did not move, she took a good look at it. Then she threw down the broom, and after casting a look of scorn at Chubb she said : "Come to bed, you old fool : that's not a mouse." "What d'you mean ?"

"Why, you simpleton, that's the baby's India rubber bottle top that I put in the goblet to keep it sweet. You ought to be ashamed of yourself carrying on in this manner at one o'clock in the morning."

They were all stricken dumb with aston- ishment, and Miss Esterly was, perhaps, more surprised than any of them. A few words in pencil, in old Hallowell's owa hand-writing, on the margin of the will, explained his reason for this disposi- tion of the property. "I have been friends with nobody"—so ran the marginal reference—"and people have looked upon me as being destitute of the attributes of humanity, and as it was my own fault, I make no complaint. Only one of all my towns-people have seen deep enough beneath the surface to surmise that old Hallowell might have feelings of his own, and she has never passed me by with- out a kind good day. And once when I passed her little garden she gave me a bunch of pansies. One I loved in youth was fond of pansies, and I think of her al- ways when I see them. And so, as Marian Esterly has treated me as if I had a soul, I bequeath to her the property which it has taken me a life-time to gather, and may Heaven bless her in its possession. All the villagers were jealous of Miss Esterly, and all thought she had been very well repaid for a few kind words and a bunch of pansies. But none could dispute	good fortune. It was not until after Miss Esterly had delivered everything into the hands of Lawyer Secors as an agent, and had her- self left for a distant town, where a school was offered her, that young Hallowell came down from London and took possession of his own. Shortly after Marian's school began in Westlake, she became acquainted with a young gentleman named Burke—a poor artist, handsome and cultivated, but with- out money, friends or influence. He secured board at the house next to the one where Marian lodged and he al- ways waited until her school was out for the day before he took his walk around the park by the beautiful lake ; and she always went with him. As a natural consequence, they fell in laye with each other, and Marian was so happy in her choice that it never occurred to her to lament the splendors she had lost in renouncing the Hallowell's inheritance. Young Burke was very eager for the wedding not to be delayed ; and one sum- mer morning they were married quietly in the little church at Westlake, and then they set out together for her husband's home. About this home he had nevér told her anything—neither had she inquired ; so you may understand she was very deeply in love with him—for now-a-days the es- tablishment is often of infinitely more con- sequence to the young lady than the man who goes along with it, by Way of incumlittle dinner party for to-morrow moht " however, do not appear to adopt this article of food from choice, nor do they eat it the whole year round. When the waters of the Oronoco and Meta are low they subsist on turtles and fish ; but during the periodical swelling of these rivers the Otomacs devour enormous quantities of clay balls, which are kept piled up in heaps in their huts. Humboldt was informed that an Indian would consume from three-quarters to one and one-quarter pound of this food daily, without any appreciable injury to health.

The Otomacs are by no means singular in their adoption of earth as an article of food, for the same practice prevails among several other tribes, chiefly in the tropics. It is stated by Humboldt and other travelers that the women employed in the small village of Banco, on the Magdalena, in burning earthenware pots, continually fill their mouths with large lumps of clay. At San Roja an Indian child was observed which, according to the statement of its mother, would hardly eat anything but earth. The negroes of Guineh are also in the habit of eating a yellowish kind of earth called canuac. While the slave trade between Africa and the West Indies was in existence, these negroes on their arrival at the plantations, would endeavor to procure some similar species of food, maintaining that the earth they devoured was harmless. It was found, however, that the caouac of the West Indies had a deleterious effect on the health of those partaking of it, and its use was strictly forbidden.

In Java the same practice prevails. In 1847 some edible clay was sent for anaysis vas not until after Miss Esterly had from Samarang to Berlin, and was found er Secors as an agent, and had her- tertiary hmestone, and composed mostly of ft for a distant town, where a school animalcules. > WHEN MEN ARE AT THEIR BEST .- Dr. Beard states that from an analysis of the lives of a thousand representative men in all the great branches of human effort, he made the discovery that the golden decado was between 30 and 40, the silver between 40 and 50, the brazen between 20 and 30, the iron between 50 and 60. The superiority of youth and middle life over did age in original work appears all the greater, when we consider the fact that nearly all the positions of honor and profit and prestige-professorships and public stationsare in the hands of the old.
