THE speech of Piolett at the fair, in this place, was not calculated to elevate him as a prophet or philosopher in the eyes of his auditors. His remedy for hard times among the farmers was to produce less and sell higher. Our farmers could not see it in that light, and we venture to say that 99 out of every 100 would prefer doubling their crops rather than reduce them. Mr. Piolett's views of political economy were entirely to primitive too impress our farmers with his Grange notions, or that such views would fit him for State Treasurer.
