THE BEGGAR GIRL OF PARIS. THE BEGGAR GIRL OF PARIS. During the "Reign of Terror" in France, there were many deeds of daring performed even by women. The very streets in Paris were deluged with blood. But near the guillotine it ran in rushing corrents. One dark morning an unusual number of the aristocracy had been marched forthless ; countless heads rolled from the block. A gaping multitude stood by, and with shouts rent the air as the aristocracy were thus buchered. Among the assembled multitude that dreary morning were two females. One of them was plainly clad, while a cloak was thrown around her, with which she kept her features nearly concealed. But a close observation would betray the fact that the woman had been unfortunate enough to fall under the ban of the leaders. The face of the woman was very beautiful, and she was young—certainly not more than sixteen years of age. The other female was quite different in character. Her face was fair, but there was a brazen expression about it. She was clad in rags, and as each head fell she would dance, and in various ways express her delight, and then exclaim : "There goes another aristocrat who re- fused me charity when I humbly sued him!"	by the hand, she said : "What does all this mean ? It is only aristocrats who are to die." "Away, woman !' exclaimed one of the executioners. "No; I will not go away until you tell me why my brother is thus bound." "Your brother ?' was the echo. 'Well, who are you ?' 'I am Maria ; don't you know me ?' 'The Beggar Girl ?' 'Aye.' 'But this is not your brother.' 'It is. Ask him—ask him.' Young Antonio de Nantes then turned a scornful glance upon the maiden, but a light crossed his face and be murmured, 'Oh, my sister ?' 'Is this your brother ?' asked Robes- pierre of the supposed beggar, advancing near her. 'It is.' 'Does Maria speak the truth ?' asked Robespierre. 'She does,' was the brother 's reply. 'And you are not de Nantes ?' 'I tell you I am her brother.' 'Why did you not tell us this before ?' 'I attempted to speak, but was silenced.' 'But your dress ?' 'It belongs to an aristocrat—perhaps to him for whom I was taken.' Robespierre advanced close to young Nantes, gazed earnestly in his face; then he approached Maria and looked steadily into her eyes for a short time. It was a moment of trial for the poor girl. She trembled in spite of all her efforts to be calm. She almost felt that she was lost, when the human fiend, whose word was law, turned and said : "Release the man.'	'Dar's whar de argyment come in !' re- plied Dan, as he began to 'circulate' around the corner in a suspiciously way. A few minutes after he told the police it was only a joke, but Pete now had the heel of the 'argyment.' The Boy for the Times. We like an active boy, one who has the impulse of the age-the steam engine in him. The very streets in Paris were deluged with blood. But near the guillotine it ran in rushing torrents. One dark morning an unusual number of the aristocracy had been marched forthless ; countless heads rolled from the block. A gaping multitude stood by, and with shouts rent the air as the aristocracy were thus buchered. Among the assembled multitude that dreary morning were two females. One of them was plainly clad, while a cloak was thrown around her, with which she kept her features nearly concealed. But a close observation would betray the fact that the woman had been unfortunate enough to fail under the ban of the leaders. The face of the woman was very beautiful, and she was young—certainly not more than sixteen years of age. The other female was quite different in character. Her face was fair, but there was a brazen expression about it. She was clad in rags, and as each head fell she would dance, and in various ways express her delight, and then exclaim : "There goes another aristocrat who re- fused me charity when I humbly sued him!"
