cy is red hot for we been crying for rethe Democre until we find them in office form, aperience what kind of reform they det. Wherever they have succeeded in getting a majority through their deception it becomes visible that the reform they want is not a reform that the people desire. In the National legislative halls they proceed to reform by chopping off counselors salaries, and taking the pennies thus saved,-added to a healthy draft, from the Treasury-to pay their friends in the South, who suffered by the ravages of war waged for the preservation of or National life .-The same kind of retrenchment prevails in our State Legislature. The statesmen who make our laws are allowed $1,000 salary for the first hundred days, and $10 a day for each of the fifty succeeding days in which they may be engaged in forming our statutes. The general public outside have an idea that three months ought to be sufficient to crystalize, into laws, the floating fancies and brilliant ideas which trouble the legislatine intellect, and in this opinion the Republican members seem to coincide, but not so the crudite Democracy. It has persistently declined to fix a day for adjournment, and with owl-like dignity, demands more time for deliberation. Meantime the appropriations reported by the House Committee, composed of a majority of Democrats, figure up neatly, the expenses of the Legislature, at just the amount necessary to cover the extra fifty days. At the first glance this may not seem like economy; but it is nevertheless, though the State Treasury is not to be directly benefitted. The economy is somewhat personal; it lies in the fact that the fifty extra days will serve to bring the legislative period within the time for the opening of the Centennial Exposition and the members, who until the adjournment of a session, by the grace of Col. Tom Scott, travel as ornamentsa sort of legislative brie-a-brae-on the Pennsylvania Railroad, can form a junketing party, to take in the Centennial, with their traveling expenses paid, and ten dollars a day pocket money to see the sights, while taking in the Exposition. This little plan will only cost the State directly over $125,000, but as it takes the money out of the State Treasury and circulates it among the people, and besides it relieves the Legislator's exche-
