SHADOWS OF SHASTA. The child of a poet's love. Wrinkled and brown as a leaf of October...

THE FOREST NEPTUNES. The green summer was away and gave place to golden autumn. Joaquin still lingered in the hospitable wigwam...

THE LAST TASHASTAS. Of her mother nothing is known. The child herself has but little recollection of her...

IRISH LADIES. Happening to be in Queenstown, Ireland, one evening in July last, I was invited to attend a grand ball...

THE GLOIOUS HONEYMOON. For the next month there was but one heaven for Joaquin Miller, and that was in the arms of the Indian maiden...

THE POET'S FIRST LOVE. Here it was that Miller first felt the awakening of the tender passion...

THE FIRST MEETING. As the story goes, Miller was at one time a stock-raider, or something of the kind, in Sixtyon county...

THE INDIAN MAIDEN. She was the daughter of the old chief of the tribe, young, not over eighteen...

THE PATERNAL SANCTION. The old chief watched the progress of events with a calm serenity and stolid indifference worthy of a statue...
