BY JOHN HAY. The song of Kilvany. The fairest she In all the land of Salvatthi. She had one child as sweet and gay And dear to her as the light of day. She was so young, and he so fair.

THE LAW OF DEATH.

The same bright eyes and the same dark bair. To see them by the blossomy way. They seemed two children at their play. There came a death dart from the sky. Kilvany saw her darling die. The glimmoring shade his eyes invades, Out of his cheek the red bloom fades ; His warm heart feels the icy chill, The round limbs shudder and are still. And yet Kilvany hold him fast Long after life's last pulse was past. As if her kisses could restore

She rose, and laughed with thankful joy, Sure that the God would save her boy She found a Lotus by the stream ; She plucked it from its noenday dream And then from door to door she fared. To ask what house by death was spared. Her heart grew cold to see the er-Of all dilate with slow surprise:

"Kilvany, thou hast lost thy head; Nothing can help a child that's dead. There stands not by the Ganges' side A house where none hath ever died." Thus through the long and weary day. From every door she bore away Within her heart, and on her arm. A heavier load, a deeper harm. By gates of gold and ivory.

By wattled huts of poverty.

The same refrain heard poor Kilvany, The living are few-the dead are many.
