WOODS IN WINTER BY MENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

When winter winds are plereing chill, And through the hawthern blows the pale With solemn feet I trend the bill, That everbrows the lonely vale O'er the bare upland, and away

Through the long reach of dezert woods, The embracing sunbeams chartely play, And gladden there deep relitudes. Where, twisted round the barren oak, The summer vine in beauty clung.

And summer winds the stillness broke. The crystal fricle is hung. Where, from their frozen urns, mute spring Pour out the river's gradual tide, Shrilly the skater's iron rines.

And voices fill the woodland side Alas! bow changed from the fair scone, When birds sangout their pullow by And winds were soft, and woods were green And the song ceased not with the day
