OLD TIMES.

There's a beautiful song on the slumbering air...

A ring and a plighted word.

A glowing cross and a glittering crown.

A tiny bed and a couch of down.

Low hopes and lesser of prayer.

A may leaf and a dimpled hand.

Three golden rings on a broken hand.

They track on the snow-white sand.

A tear and a stolen kiss.

There's a throb of grief in the beautiful song...

We heard it first at the dawn of day.

And it mingled with the morn'g breeze.

But years have dimmed the beautiful day.

And its melody grows so softly away.

And we call it "Old Times."

FOUR HUNDRED AND ELEVEN.

"411?"

"That's me, sir."

"Let me see your arm."

"It's all right, sir."

"All right, it is? In my humble opinion, it's about as wrong as wrong can be."

All looked down at the bruised flesh and broken bones he had affirmed to be 'all right' with a half contemptuous smile...

The light of the setting sun stole into the room, illuminating with sudden glory the bare walls and comfortless surroundings...

The doctor's frank, good humored face, bright, easy figure, and an air of good breeding could not have been out of place under any circumstances...

But the doctor seemed strangely in unison with the other contradictory things in his surroundings...

Though the suggestive words he used were his own, they were not his own words...

"What's that?" pointing to a small blue figure on the brawny wrist.

"That? Oh! my crest, I did it when I was a boy," said the man indifferently.

"Your crest?"

"Did I say that?" and a flush crept over his face.

"I must have been dreaming; people do dream sometimes, don't they?"

The doctor did not answer, but looking keenly at him, turned away his head with a short embarrassed laugh.

"What's your name?"

"No. 411."

"I don't mean that; I mean your name, just the doctor."

"Jim Brown?"

"Dr. Harris laughed. 'Jim Brown? Why don't you say Bill Brown? One name would suit as well as the other.'"

"I frowned slightly. 'Why should I tell you my name?'"

"I'm sure I don't know," was the answer, "unless because I want you to. That crest on your arm is very much like my own. I thought perhaps we were related."

"And if we were, you wouldn't object to my calling you 'uncle'?"

"Why not? I'm not a bad fellow in my way, neither do I think you are. Why shouldn't I own you?"

The man raised himself on his arm and looked searchingly in the doctor's face.

"A convict?" he said slowly.

"Well," said the doctor, dryly, "I don't see much society except convicts, at present, and I can't say but what I like them as well as I do those who think themselves a good deal better. I've found out it isn't always the worst that are caught, by any means. I'm a radical, you must know," he added, quietly, "and very much disappointed by the family."

"I looked out into the gathering darkness for some minutes, and then said quietly:

"Well, sir, if you care to hear a convict's story, sit down while I've never told to any one, and I'll tell you my story."

"Soon I noticed Lucy's letters grew shorter and shorter, and finally one came saying that 'she had been thinking over our foolish engagement, and as there was no prospect of my being able to support her, she had come to the conclusion that for the sake of us both it had better be broken.'"

"I know every word of that cruel heartless letter now. One remembers such things. Very soon after I heard of the engagement to Mr. Pierson. I was a gentleman, but he was a snob; he had money and I hadn't."

water, will you? Thanks. Well, I ought to commend with my name, I suppose. It is, Edward...

It was the second son of a Northumberland squire, who had just money enough to keep up the place for my brother, and no more.

A fine old place; and was, and only happy days can look to were spent there.

That was when I was a boy—home for the holidays, eager about cricket and foot ball, and to whom a dog and a rabbit were perfect happiness.

After a while it was unpleasant enough. My brother—a lazy, good looking fellow, who knew how to drink and shoot, and only that was the idol of my parents and sisters.

All deferred to him, except little Mary, my pet, who used to follow me around like a kitten.

Poor little girl! I wonder if she ever thinks of me now.

Younger sons in a poor family have a hard time of it. I don't wonder more than do, that I had had to go to school, and to be a gentleman, they are thrown on their own resources—to live on their wits, either in some beggarly profession or as bachelors where there are any rich relations.

My father had been put up with being snubbed and thrown out whenever they came in the way—made use of and then cast aside; at least such is my experience.

I was proud and passionate, and so felt those things more than others, I dare say. I wanted to go into the army, but that was not to be.

I was offered a London barrister—a pompous man, whom I cordially detested before the month was out.

He always had a way of aggravating me when I was angry against him, and I would not have been so patient if I had not been so young.
