A STORY BY THE SEA. BY THOMAS MACKELLAR

At mid of night beside the sen. The moon far in the west, I sigh'd for one long gone from me Whoday by day still seems to be

A dweller in my breast. And suddenly a stranger came A man of bow'd yet stalwart frame Whose face I knew not, nor his name-

And sat him by my side. He lab! his brawny arts on mine. That old man by the sea : His locks were hoar with age and brine. His eyes with fitful gleams did shine-A weird old man was he,

"Comrade!" so spake the welfd old man, "A good God loves us all. This world is order'd by a plan, Too broad for thee or me to sear, That covers great and small. Why hug a sorrow in thy heart

And nurse it into life? Why rub the wound until it smart? Why turn against thyself the dart And perish in the strife? In other years-how long ago, Comrade, I cannot tell .-In sun and shine, in rata and snow, When all was calm, when storms

I served a skipper well. I saved his life and risk'd mine own : A daughter fair had he: Before another year had run The skipper own'd me as a son-'My husband!' whisper'd she,

I built a cabin on the shore : Next door to heaven it seem'd : For love came in the open door, Its blessed presence beam'd,

The God in whom we trusted sent A babe of beauty there, And as the seasons came and went, They added, to our glad coment, Two others just as fair. I went a voyage o'er the sea,

My heart still staying home : O'er many a sea and far country For wife-sake and our children three I was content to roam. My wandering journey o'er, I sought My cot beside the sea, For love and treasure I had brought

Beyond my boylasod's wildest thought, For wife and children three, My hurrying feet soon reach'd the spot A ruin mock'd my sight; Mid smoking embers, black and hot, All, all had perish'd with the cot-My heart died, too, that night.

Comrade ! the years I count no more. I leave them in God's hand; I gave away my hard-arn'd store To those who needed treasure more, And now I watch the strand : And when the wracking winds do blow Lost vessels to the shore,

In my good life-boat forth I go, To aid the strugglers in their woe, As Christ hath done before. Now, comrade! ere with thee I par This only will I say: Go heal the sorrows of thy heart (No matter whose'ere thou ari)
