There was one little prince in blue satin and silver cours dress, whose mother ought to pray that he might go to heaven before he grows up to spoil one trace of his open, laughing beauty; and the fair boy in black satin Continental dress, with white silk stockings and ruffles at his wrists, looked as if he had just stepped out of a picture, with countenance and grave, delicate complexions-too delicate for pleasure, and, with their shrinking manners, seemed like wandering moonbeams. Even the slender, fragile creatures of fifteen who will be debutantes next season, who held the parts of Continental dames in flower-ed trains and powdered hair, there was hardly one of them that looked substantial enough to kiss. Like sugar angels, they were to look at, but not to taste. But fency how charmsalon, with groups of ministure court people in gold and satin, with blue and purple and rose mantles figures a tap membed in the window seats, delicate faces, happy, tiny sprines, hardly as siderably away from its mean forestall as their golden hair was long presided and hovered over by anxious mammas in black satin and white bonnets.
