in the same inclosure. It is held by many that this tribute to the memories of the departed should be extended to one and the other, at the same time and by the same hands. To this a general assent cannot be expected. In paying respect to the fallen soldier an appreciation of the cause for which he sacrificed his life is inexparably blended with it. We eathout honor the one without bonoring the other. Now, it is all right and proper that those who sympathized with the Confederate cause should be strew with flowers the graves of the Confederate dead—for the same that the confederate dead is the confederate dead in the confederate
