tion, the minister's cheek did not blanch. With great presence of mind he seated himself comfortably upon his floating sister, and, waving a farewell to his congregation, began to sing a cheerful hymn. The current steadily carried him on at the rate of at least six miles an hour, and in a short time his weeping congregation was left out of sight and hearing. Without oars or sails, he was unable to navigate the sister to the shore, and there is reason to suppose that before the next morning he was far out on the Gulf of Mexico.

If any one would like to know what manner of men those who fought around Osman Pasha were, they can gain an idea of them from an anecdote that my friend told me. A very steep rock was to be stormed. It rose to the height of 250 feet, and was crowned by Russian batteries.

A Turkish colonel, desirous of setting an example to his men, scrambled up first by help of occasional projections in the rock, and roots and weeds. When he reached the top he found Among the colored ladies of Clayville was one who had long desired to submit to the rite of baptism, but who was deterred by a strong repugnance to the inevitable wetting which is inseparable from the rite. Scores of times this estimable lady had determined to be baptized at the next available opportunity, but at the last moment her courage always tailed her. In the days prior to emancipation, she had been the slave of a Clayville planter, and she still retained a warm affection for the young master whom she had nursed in his inference.
