

ACCIDENTALLY IN COURT

No lawyer likes going into court with a thoroughly good case—yet how can he help it sometimes?

I should have more patience with the question, "Do you ever think it right to defend a man when you believe to be guilty?"

Was it my place when George Gilbert's little sorrow-worn wife came, with tears glistening in her eyes, to beseech me to do what I could for her imprisoned husband, virtuous to turn my back, and have her tried, struggling heart to break or not, as it might?

I was neither a priest nor a Levite to find a ready excuse for passing by on the other side. Yet what could I do? George Gilbert had been on a collecting tour, and had gambled away money received for his employ-

"In the first place, I'll see Messrs. Mangie & Meek," I said. "I have merely been brought to hear reason, after all—if he can only be made to see his interest in it."

The pale dependent face cheered up a little. My words seemed to have inspired a sort of undoubted hope which I was far from feeling myself.

"Young man," his answer said, "don't waste time in appeals to sentiment; you won't find it any use just now at all."

I took the hint, and came at once to business, repeated Gilbert's offer, and put it as strongly as possible that more was to be gained by leniency than harshness—all of which Mr. Mangie listened to with a conscientious frown.

"I cannot be a party to compounding a felony," he answered with a solemn intonation. "Nor have I asked you," I replied, "not a little method."

"Oh! it's all the same," was the contemptuous rejoinder—"anybody but a lawyer, could see that. Besides, there's something rather cool in the proposal to retain your friend in the employment, under pretence of working out the money he has stolen, with the opportunity of doing twice as much in the same time."

I felt my temper rising, and not caring to imperil my client's interests by an outright quarrel, I took a hasty leave. Had I been in the prisoner's place on the morning fixed for the trial, I could hardly have ascended the court-house steps with more reluctance than I did.

And when I entered the court-room, and found Gilbert and his wife already there, an unnoted and hope-look which the latter greeted my coming, my heart sickened at the thought of the bitter disappointment coming.

A Big Fish Story

We were making a voyage from the West Coast to New York, when the ship-ferret broke out among the crew. One of the sailors, among the first victims, was accompanied by his son, a lad of fourteen years, who was strongly attached to his father, and remained with him day and night, and never could be persuaded to leave his sick father, not for a moment.

A large shark was seen every day following the vessel, evidently for the purpose of devouring any one who should die and be committed to the deep.

After lingering a few days the sailor died. As was the custom at sea, he was sewed up in a blanket, and for the purpose of sinking him an old griddle was placed in the water, and the body was put in with him. The very impressive service of the Episcopal Church was then read, and the body committed to the deep.

The poor boy, who had watched the proceedings with his eyes, and after his father, when an enormous shark swallowed them both. The second day after this dreadful scene, the shark continued to follow the vessel—for there were others sick in the ship—one of the sailors proposed to make an effort to take him.

They fastened the hook to a large rope and baited it with a piece of pork, threw it into the sea, and the shark instantly swallowed it. Having thus hooked him, by means of a rope which he hoisted him on board. After he was dead they prepared to open him, when one of the sailors, stopping down for that purpose, suddenly passed, and after listening a few moments, declared that he was approached by a young man with a cat-paw in hand, and he ceased his yelling in response to a gesture.

"I was passing this place at eleven o'clock this forenoon," began the stranger, "and you asked me if I would have a dozen eggs. I was with my mother, who is in feeble health, and I could not stop. In fact, I had even replied to your kind inquiry. I have now returned to—"

"To buy a dozen—here they are, sir." "No, sir, not to buy lemons, for they are not at good on my liver, but so say to you that I won't take any. You asked me a civil question, and common courtesy required me to return a civil answer. I have needed fair prices, in conjunction with an immense crop. But the Rural World reminds the farmers that 'the European war will not last always; that next year perhaps there will be a larger crop in Great Britain than has been for many years past; that but a very small portion of our crops may be wanted abroad, and in consequence the very lowest prices may prevail for all our farm crops.'"

"To be forwarded is to be forewarned. Farmers, therefore, who wish to make the most of their crops this year, had better pay their debts. Instead of incurring new debts, pay off the old ones. Get in an independent condition. The farm will always make an industrious farmer a good living. A combination of causes has made you as you are, and peace of mind that the debtor cannot enjoy will be yours—N. Y. Commercial."

Every day develops something new and valuable for the farmer. A modern improved machinery for rapidly making hay favors the reform, but as yet it does not seem to have been very effective.—Boston Globe.

The farmer who "filched" the mortgage from their land during the flush times caused by the war, were the fortunate ones; while those who went into debt here generally failed. In view of the prosperity of the farming class during the past year, it is well to remember this experience.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD

Can't Grow Salad. Roll a cutflower in salted water till it is stiff, then in cold water, and cut, cut it up neatly in small sprigs. Boil together three tablespoonfuls of oil and one tablespoonful of vinegar, with pepper and salt to taste; rub the dish very lightly with butter, and pour the dressing over it. It is a common belief among farmers that grass out when nearly ripe gives more weight per acre. It may not be true, but if they think so, it will be pretty sure to let it stand to maturity, and the result will be a crop of self-interest in the other direction gets them out of the miserable habit. In general the idea prevails that a few days' delay as to haying makes all the difference, and so, when grain is ripening about the same time, they get the preference of cutting early. Farmers should be timely—those who seek to sell hay, at least, at the very best time, and that a failure to do so will bring a financial penalty. Late-cut and over-ripe hay is little better than straw, and observing purchasers know it. Millions of dollars are every year lost to the country from this one cause—because, in general, farmers are so slow in adopting this reform. One modern improved machinery for rapidly making hay favors the reform, but as yet it does not seem to have been very effective.—Boston Globe.

SHOCKING TRAGEDY

POOR-SOUTH, Va., June 13.—A gloom was cast over our city yesterday by a sad and shocking tragedy, in which John Owens murdered his son Robert, about twenty-five years of age, with a big butcher-knife. The father is the proprietor of a large grocery establishment in Newton, in the suburbs of Portsmouth, and has heretofore borne a good character. But day before yesterday he got drunk, the first time in two years, and had been in a bloodthirsty mood ever since.

He came into the house about two o'clock in the afternoon, and seeing his son jerked up a sharp butcher-knife and stabbed him to death. No cause is assigned for the savage act except that he was drunk. In a few minutes after the murder, and while his family were screaming and shrieking he tried to cut his own throat. In the suicide he was unsuccessful, and about half-past two he was arrested and put in jail.

Robert Owens, the victim, was a most estimable and promising young man, and the greatest grief felt at his death. He was even-tempered, and never did anything in his life to provoke his father. About six months ago he became engaged to a well known belle, and was to have been married this fall.

On the Campus Martius a man yesterday shouted from sunrise till dark: "Oranges and lemons—best in market—have a dozen, sir?"

At about five o'clock he was approached by a young man with a cat-paw in hand, and he ceased his yelling in response to a gesture. "I was passing this place at eleven o'clock this forenoon," began the stranger, "and you asked me if I would have a dozen eggs. I was with my mother, who is in feeble health, and I could not stop. In fact, I had even replied to your kind inquiry. I have now returned to—"

"To buy a dozen—here they are, sir." "No, sir, not to buy lemons, for they are not at good on my liver, but so say to you that I won't take any.
