

BY MRS. M. A. DENISON.

"Quarrelled with Frank?" exclaimed Mrs. Westworth...

"Not to love with Frank?" exclaimed her sister, holding up both hands...

"What do you think the smoke jack will do for me?" asked the old man...

"I don't know, but I'll give you five dollars for it," replied the old man...

"I don't know, but I'll give you five dollars for it," replied the old man...

"I don't know, but I'll give you five dollars for it," replied the old man...

"I don't know, but I'll give you five dollars for it," replied the old man...

"I don't know, but I'll give you five dollars for it," replied the old man...

What could she say? Nothing. Her eyes, eloquent with tears, did all the talking.

"Did you know Frank was going to preach this morning?" she asked of Mrs. Westworth...

"I am tired of it, and I forgive you," she said. "Love is better than money."

"I don't know, but I'll give you five dollars for it," replied the old man...

"I don't know, but I'll give you five dollars for it," replied the old man...
