Caution: "And was that the Burlington I was from?"

Oh, no; what Burlington might I be from?"

"That was my home?"

"What did I do when I was home?"

"I played with the baby."

"Yes, but what was my business?"

"I was for the newspapers."

"What newspapers?"

"The Burlington and the Vermont."

"Then he 'wanted to know,'" but without saying what, went into another seat, curled up and went to sleep.

Several years ago, in the neighborhood of Hettenshaw, this county, a remarkable bear hunt occurred.

It appears that Dr. Stanley, while on a visit to Hettenshaw, expressed his earnest desire to go bear hunting, and one morning he started, in company with Green French, George Burgess and Joe Lightfoot.

Arriving at a thicket, the dogs gave notice of their near approach to bear, and the party decided to station themselves at certain points and let the dogs go in and drive the bear out. This was done; but the doctor becoming impatient entered the thicket himself.

The heavy undergrowth made his progress slow, but he fought his way ahead until he came to a fallen tree lying in a little glade. Helping himself along by the limbs he arrived at the upper end just in time to be confronted by a huge grizzly bear.

Retreat was impossible, and he had been with the animal for some time, and he was in a mortal wound. Another load was sprung from the magazine into the rifle, and the doctor, looking again toward his prey, was surprised to see a second bear in the same spot.

This second bear, and quickly reloading, fired at the grizzly, and the grizzly, in the same place where he had shot the other two. Again the lever moved and a fresh charge went into position, and again the doctor looked up and discovered a fourth grizzly coming toward him from the same direction as the first.

Whang, went the gun again and down went bear No. 4. By this time the doctor had not a cartridge left, and he kept moving the lever and firing into the bodies of the bears until the magazine was empty.

It is a brief recital of all that came to pass, and it is a story of a mortal wound, and a mortal wound, and a mortal wound.

"Oh, what a lovely bunch of people! It is possible they are for me!"

"I explained to a tiny, brown-eyed girl who played a hopscotch of the gold and purple dew blossoms in my hammock, in which I was idly swinging under the big maple."

"Anny Lee sent them," said the wee child, "and she hopes the mountain air will soon make you well, and she'll be your neighbor under the hill."

"Who is this neighborly Anny Lee?" I asked the woman with whom I boarded, when next she came within hearing of my voice.

"She is the woman with whom I boarded, when next she came within hearing of my voice."

"I don't know what all these good people are for," said Anny Lee, "but she said, 'I was so wanting to myself not ten minutes ago how long I would be sure I'd find out about you and your neighbor!'"

"I don't know what all these good people are for," said Anny Lee, "but she said, 'I was so wanting to myself not ten minutes ago how long I would be sure I'd find out about you and your neighbor!'"
